The trio (Jo Ann Jordan, Peter Rubman, Kenny Armstrong), with their own banjoist Kenny Dotson and the 10-piece Lou LeVitt orc backing, takes on a new dimension on the bigger stage to showcase full entertainment values. The 25-minute turn (trimmed from the usual 45-minute lounge act) proves the talent and the diversity are there to capture the larger audiences, despite the lack of intimacy associated with the smaller lounges.

Jo Ann, a blond looker with the poundage well distributed for added visual appeal, holds the trio's anchor spot with commanding vocals in all tempi, and nicely fills in on the comedic routines with Armstrong (at piano) and Rubman (on string bass). Thrush is equally impressive belting "Rockabye" or caressing "Make Someone Happy," her exit title. Delivery and projection leave no doubt she knows her way around with a varied songalog.

Group's full turn, with lotsa accent on comedy when Miss Jordan is not solo, includes a tab minstrel show (with vintage jokes of the era) which allows Dotson to show his talents on banjo, and an operatic tabdeff, each done with full costuming. Rubman handles the story-telling and one-liners in pro fashion. He also has the facial mobility to enhance his upstaging. Armstrong gets into the act too, throwing lines with the co-partners. Three manage to hit the indigo at times, but in a manner not offensive.

Not to ignore the Twist rage, Miss Jordan and Rubman invite tablers on stage for a bit of impromptu gyrating to "Let's Do the Twist." Trio also essays the likes of "Up a Lazy River" and many of the standards and pops.

With this theatre-restaurant exposure, unquestionably a success by criterion of audience endorsement, it's suggested Miss Jordan and crew can turn an eye to bigger bookings. It's an act that deserves, and commands, much attention.

Current bill runs through Feb. 7.

The Cave, Van., B. C.

Vancouver, Jan. 11.

Guy Mitchell, Scotty Turnbull, Bob Bromley & His Puppets, Barney Potts, Chris Gage Orch (7); $2 weeknights, $2.50 weekends.

Guy Mitchell's return to this nitery is doubly welcome as the singer is popular here not only on his own but also for his Danish-Canadian wife Elsa, the girl he met six years ago at the Cave-operated Arctic Club. For this occasion Mitchell has also brought in a Canadian guitar accompanist, Scotty Turnbull, and this time, too, he sheds his previous trademark as a hit parade pop singer and emerges as a fully rounded entertainer.

Mitchell works into his act easily and smoothly, opening with a medley of his past Columbia discklicks that takes in "One Of The Rovin' Kind," "Sparrow In The Treetop," "Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania," "Singin' The Blues," and "Truly Truly Fair." But once this identity is well established he moves into a singalong that had auditors joining in with gusto.

Mitchell closes with a western medley, topper being a torrid "T For Tennessee." His facility with this genre, a la his work on the rodeo circuit the past season, plus his ease with folksong, may be the tip-off to his real forte. The 55-minute session caught indicates that the pop idiom may be too narrow a field to confine the wide range of Mitchell's talent.

Turnbull, a former Canadian Olympic sprinter, was formerly with Tommy Sands. He is responsible for band arrangements and accompaniment, and throws in some pleasing guitar picking of his own, Chet Atkins-style, being generously spotlighted on a solo "I'm Gonna Stay Single The Rest Of My Life" that catches the crowd's fancy.

Making his first appearance in Vancouver, Bob Bromley & His Puppets present a class continental-styled act that's unusual and highly skilled. Bromley's puppet characters have genuine identities of their own. This is best displayed in a parade of personalities that covers a fading opera diva, a langorous tap dancer, a longhair pianist and a pathetic little clown. Sheer artistry of string manipulation that produces spontaneous applause is shown in Bromley's man on the flying trapeze and his closing Folies Bergere stripteaser.

A switch in house orchs has fire-wrecked Arctic Club, and the brought in Chris Gage from the new combo backs the show expertly. Change also sees Barney Potts in as emcee and he does this ably.

Kingston Trio (Nick Reynolds, Bob Shane, John Stewart), Ronnie Schell, Dick Stabile orch (13); $2.50 cover, $3 Fri.-Sat.

Kingston Trio, High Priests of the still burgeoning cult of folksinging, herewith pay off a date owed Grove since the act cancelled its last July stand during upheaval attending the withdrawal from act of Dave Guard and John Stewart joining. Opening night (17) about 500 payees were in 900-seat nitery, and that looks about par outlook over three-week course.

Stewart has less vivid personality than had Guard—at least in view of some. For others, being younger, he may be found more engaging. He has worked rather well into combo, no easy task, for these lads display ingenious musicianship in fingering banjos, guitars and bongos.

Being founder members of act, Bob Shane and Nick Reynolds have more aplomb — at least at this point, than the recruit. However, their sound appears not to have lost a whit of its appeal, long proved vast. Their vocalling of folktunes—from madrigals to Latinos to hoedowns to gutbucket Dixie—still tops any of their numerous "imitators," and that goes for "The Cumberland 3," whence came Stewart to join this troupe.

Success of outfit needs no embellishment at this point, but it might be pointed out how shrewd have been these boys in retaining their campus-cut appearance—sort of grey-flannel folktuners rather than Levi-clad strummers most frequently encountered.

Highlights are the exquisitely poignant "Where Have the Flowers Gone?," "Chilly Winds" (newie clefted by Stewart, but not announced as so), the martial Irish air "Roddy McCurley" and high-humored madrigal "The Shape of Things."

In serving up 14 tunes over 56 minutes, act still retains its tremendous disclick. "Tom Dooley," but for avid Kingstonians that Blue Ridge bit is wearing thin at this point. Stewart's 'tween-tune asides on politics should play both sides of street; why play the egghead fringe and alienate—or risk going so—majority of payees?

Morty Corb, bass, is sole accomp, and excellent.

Preceding, Ronnie Schell (touring on and off with Kingstons couple of years) takes chance of being literal in billing self "America's slowest rising young comedian." He starts with oneliners, not his best metier and his uncertainty shows.

His top talent is one bits in which he enacts all the parts. These are sharp, biting, witty—but too protracted. A solid ore shaft of talent gleams beneath, however. Just a matter of properly projecting it and honing it, at this point.

Dick Stabile's orch (13) keeps floor thronged with dancers between shows. Band, considerably streamlined numerically from what it was, is excellently balanced (five brass, five reeds, three rhythm) and Stabile's arrangements are just right for Grove-goers.

Next: Lena Horne, Feb. 6.

Chris Rayburn, Billy Rubenstein Trio, Andy Hamon; $3.50 minimum.

Richard Kollmar's Left Bank, which serves not only a distinguished set of groceries but also seems to possess an eye for upcoming talent, has a bill which is of top interest. Chris Rayburn (New Acts), a young Negro singer, is making her debut in this spot, and the Billy Rubenstein Trio has a beat and a style that merits attention. The holdover pianist-singer is Andy Hamon.

Rubenstein, at the piano, seems to have a wide range of musical abilities, most of which lie in the modern idiom. He goes from a Miles Davis composed piece to off-beat interpretations of standards. There is delicacy and strength in many of his offerings and he can be a focal point of interest in many situations.

Hamon does the interim entertainment. He's a good lounge operator with a wide catalog of tunes and a commercial delivery. Jose.

The Fire Raisers and Box and Cox

London, Jan. 10.

English Stage Co. presentation of two one-act plays, "The Fire Raisers" by Max Frisch, translated by Michael Bullock, and "Box and Cox," by John Maddison Morton. Staged by Lindsay Anderson; decor, Alan Tagg; music, Dudley Moore. Features Alfred Marks, James Booth, Colin Blakely, Doris Hare. Opened Dec. 21, '61, at the Royal Court Theatre, London; $2.50 top.

BOX AND COX

The mainstay of this two-part program is, of course, the Max Frisch 90-minute one-acter, "The Fire Raisers," fluently translated by Michael Bullock. It is an allegorical play, and though its message of the potential horrors of nuclear armament comes through without much subtlety, the parable offers diverting and absorbing features. While hardly a subject to have investors standing in line, it will surely engender critical interest, particularly among artie reviewers.

As the centre-piece the author has chosen a smug, prosperous business man, who allows two incendiaries to invade his home. There's a reign of terror in the locality as a result of the activities of arsonists, but the two trespassers are blithely allowed to bring in cans of oil, explosives and fuses into the attic of the house. The owner believes that his friendly gestures will placate the criminals, but inevitably the holocust reaches his own home.

In a costing switch, Alfred Marks plays the part of the business man with a wry mixture of comedy and drama, displaying a remarkable resemblance to the Prime Minister Macmillan. Colin Blakely and James Booth offer subtle contrast as the arson-happy trespassers, and Doris Hare plays a smallish part suavely. Lindsay Anderson merits praise for his astute staging, and Alan Tagg's solid set fits the subject.

A revival of "Box and Cox," a lightweight Victorian frolic, is offered as the curtain-raiser.

Flora

Paris, Jan. 19.

Denis and Marcel Maurey-Arthur Lesser production of new play in three acts by Franco Brusati and Fabio Mauri. Adapted from the Italian by Albert Husson. Starring Melina Mercouri and Jean-Pierre Aumont. Director, Jules Dassin; sets, Alexandre Trauner; costumes, Denny Vachlioti. At Theatre des Varietes, Paris, January 18, '62; $3.50 top.

|---|---|
| Tino Pinucci | Michel Dumoulin |
| Irma | Nelly Benedetti |
| First work-girl | Jules Dassin |
| Second work-girl | Richelle Dassin |
| Flora Magnano | Melina Mercouri |
| Emma Rota | Jacqueline Porel |
| Giacomino Magnano | Jean-Pierre Aumont |
| Cafe Waiter | Francis Terzian |
| Ravasio | Pierre Mirat |
| Ruggero | Jean Degrave |
| Olga Ravasio | Liliane Brousse |
| Ottavio | Jean Marin |

Melina Mercouri has played Paris legit before, appearing in two Marcel Achard plays in the early 1950's. Since her stardom in Greek features and "Never On Sunday" she has a new public here and this public will doubtless be turning up to see her in "Flora."

"Flora," which Albert Husson, author of "My Three Angels," has adapted from an Italian comedy-drama, is a serviceable vehicle which Jules Dassin's direction causes to travel at a brisk and breezy pace. It is chiefly an excuse for a bravura performance by Miss Mercouri, but the supporting roles have been shrewdly cast and are excellently acted and Dassin has polished the production into an entertaining and fast-moving show. It should become one of the Paris season's biggest box-office hits.

Flora is a fashionable Roman dress-maker, an emancipated and strong-minded career woman who, though happily married, indulges openly in outside affairs. Her husband, too, has romances away from home and this couple, having attained a mutual understanding, discuss together their ex-marital activities.

One day the husband falls seriously ill and after convalescing in the country decides that he should remain true to his wife and she to him. Her reply is to depart immediately on a cruise with a young tenor. Her husband frets and worries, longing for her return, but when she comes back her passionate nature drives her into another fly-by-night affair, this time a fatal one.

As a script "Flora" is of dubious literary value, being half a boulevard comedy, almost a bedroom farce, and half a suspense melodrama and its third act climax, a murder, comes as a jarring surprise. It is, however, with Miss Mercouri, a definite Broadway possibility and motion picture certainty.

Flora is a rewarding role for Miss Mercouri. It offers her some fine opportunities to display her versatility. She has some earthy low comedy bits which she does in her appealing and hilarious "Never On Sunday" style. There are some torrid sex scenes which she does, though very differently, equally well. The last act throws down another challenge, calling for some tense dramatic acting and again Miss Mercouri takes this unexpected dimension in her stride, proving herself an actress of enormous range and unfailing fascination.

"Flora" is certainly her play, but Dassin has not allowed the star to completely eclipse the supporting company. Jean-Pierre Aumont registers strongly as the husband. Jacqueline Porel registers as her envious rival, and Nelly Benedetti as the secretary, Jacques Marin as the husband's yokel pal, Pierre Mirat as a pompous friend, Liliane Brousse as one of the husband's more sentimental victims, Michel Dumoulin as the shy singer and Francis Terzian as the macabre cafe waiter, symbol and messenger of death, are impressive and of great aid. Alexandre Trauner has designed a fanciful set of the Roman apartment. "Flora" appears destined to cross the ocean after a long run here.

Las Facinadoras

(The Fascinating Girls)

Mexico City, Dec. 8.

Jorge Schwarz presentation of musical comedy in three acts (six scenes) by Felipe Santander with music by Raul Sayago, based on an original idea by Jaime Rojas. Staged by Xavier Rojas; scenery, David Anton; costumes, Manuel Mendez. N.; choreography, Edmundo Mendoza. At the Insurgentes Theatre; admission 96c.

"Las Facinadoras" ("The Fascinating Girls") is an exciting production for Mexico because it is the first all-Mexican musical comedy to be a success. The only two others written, produced, directed and acted by Mexicans were flops. The only successful productions of musical comedy here have been translations of Broadway or London shows, including "Los Novios" ("The Boy Friend"), "Ring, Ring Llama el Amor" ("Bells Are Ringing"), "Mi Bella Dama" ("My Fair Lady"), "Los Fantasticos" ("The Fantasticks"), "La Peliroja" ("The Redhead") and "La Tia de Carlos" ("Charley's Aunt").

"Las Facinadoras" is good, clean, funny and generally fast moving (except for the first act). The cast performs enthusiastically and with surprising stamina, considering that they do two shows nightly, seven nights a week, although it is a taxing physical stint. The story is about a group of university students who want to put on a musical show, and the financial and emotional problems involved. The script is generously sprinkled with funny lines which are well delivered.

The book was written by Felipe Santander, who also plays a leading role. He is a handsome man with an attractive smile, but he is an indifferent actor.

The producer, Dr. Jorge Schwarz, is a young practicing dentist, who reportedly put up $80,000 to do the show. This is the first musical he has ever produced. The scenery, designed by David Anton, is fresh and clever, especially when a swimming pool scene swings around on the revolving stage and there is the famous lava rock wall of "The Pedregal" (near the National Univ.) with an actual fountain gushing water.

Manuel Mendez is responsible for the costumes, with the aid of local manufacturers. Edmundo Mendoza, an excellent dancer-choreographer who has studied in New York, has made this a hoofing show. There are few other real dancers in the cast, but he has created steps and movements which enable them to seem professional terpers.

The music was composed by Raul Sayago and although there is nothing new and different about his music, it is catchy and singable, and adequate for the story. There is only one Calypso number, and little of the typical Latin flavor to the score.

Even to non-Spanish-speaking audiences, the story is comprehensible, as much of the humor is visual. With the success of "Las Facinadoras," there will probably be more Mexican musicals written and produced here.

La Polka des Lampions

(The Cocked Hat Polka)

Paris, Dec. 20.

Maurice Lehmann presentation of musical comedy in two acts (20 scenes), with book and lyrics by Marcel Achard, suggested by the film "Some Like It Hot," and music by Gerard Calvi. Staged by Maurice Lehmann, assisted by Dirck Sanders; sets and costumes, Raymond Fost, Dignimont; choreography, Dirck Sanders, Louis Orlandi; musical direction, Felix Nuvelone. Stars Georges Guetary, Jean Richard; features Annie Dupare, Nicole Broissin, Jeanne Serval, Jacques Dynam, Daniel. Opened Dec. 19, '61, at the Chatelet Theatre, Paris; $4 top.

| Charles | Georges Guetary |
| Blaise | Jean Richard |
| Marie | Annie Dupare |
| Nicole | Nicole Broissin |
| Emilie | Jeanne Serval |
| Durand | Jacques Dynam |
| Marcassini | Daniel |
| Octave | Michel Mayou |
| Lerner | Georges Montax |
| Assumption | Zaida |
| Singers, dancers, others. | |

Though written by the noted playwright Marcel Achard, this new musical follows the usual patterns for the Chatelet Theatre, and is presumably due for the usual run, but offers nothing for export.

"La Polka des Lampions" ("The Cocked Hat Polka") is mainly a series of production numbers, with the book merely an outline for world travel and comedy bits by costars Georges Guetary and Jean Richard. The numbers don't reveal character or advance the story.

Loosely based on the Hollywood film, "Some Like It Hot," the tuner follows two male musicians who don femme garb to join an all-woman band in 1920s France. The device gets the standard laughs. Both men fall for the orchestra leader, with further complications of somebody using the girls' powder boxes to smuggle dope around the world.

Georges Guetary, as the more romantic male, is in good voice and Jean Richard, the comedy relief, has the timing and clowning talents to get laughs and score in one good number about the man who is never taken seriously in life.

Annie Duparc is a bright femme lead and Nicole Broissin a good soubrette. The dances are aimed more as big production numbers than springing from the action. The costumes are bright and the staging is in the massive operetta tradition, with good mechanical effects.

Gerard Calvi's music is functional, without catchy strains for the romantic and special numbers. The dancing is traditional in take-offs on revue or folk type effects.

La Pensee

Paris, Dec. 26.

Lucie Germain presentation of two-act (six scenes) drama by Leonide Andreyev, adapted by Carlos Semprun. Staged by Laurent Terzieff; scenery, Andre Lacombe; costumes, Francoise Grassin. Stars Laurent Terzieff; features Pascale De Boysson, Michael Lonsdale, R. J. Chauffard, Yvette Etievant. Opened Dec. 20, '61, at the Theatre De Lutece, Paris; $3 top.

|---|---|
| Kergentzeff | Laurent Terzieff |
| Tatiana | Pascale De Boysson |
| Alexei | Michael Lonsdale |
| Semenoff | R. J. Chauffard |
| Macha | Yvette Etievant |
| Daria | Jacqueline Dane |
| Petrovitch | Jacques Jeannet |
| Priamol | Gilles Guillot |
| Fedorovitch | Jacques Lalande |
| Vassia | Andre Pignoux |
| Sascia | Marie-Jose Coussieu |

Film actor Laurent Terzieff returns to the stage to direct and star in this play of ideas by the late Russian dramatist Leonide Andreyev, author of "He Who Gets Slapped." He scores in both capacities in this drama of the fine line between sanity and madness.

First part of the drama is taut and eerie, as the hero tells a woman who had once jilted him and married his friend that he could possibly kill her husband.

The Umbrella

Philadelphia, Jan. 21.

Ketti Frings (in association with Robert Evans) presentation of drama in two acts, by Bertrand Castelli, in collaboration with Jack Raphael Guss. Staged by Gene Frankel; scenery, Rouben Ter-Arutunian; costumes, Theoni V. Aldredge; lighting, John Harvey; ensemble movement direction, Daniel Nagrin; sound, Robert W. Stringer; assistant director, Frances Frankel. Stars Geraldine Page, Anthony Franciosa, Arthur O'Connell. Opened Jan. 20, '62, at the Locust Theatre, Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Jan. 20.

More like an elaborate off-Broadway entry than a regular season production, Ketti Frings' "The Umbrella" opened Saturday (20) at the New Locust to the complete mystification of a sizable segment of the first night audience.

Superbly set and expertly performed, the new play by Bertrand Castelli and Jack Raphael Guss is a fresh assault on the naturalistic stage. It is one of those anti-form theatrical projects at which many customers sit perplexed at the finale, not knowing if the show has ended and fearing to ask.

A thin, translucent, plastic curtain rises to reveal a surrealist landscape—the wasteland of the world the day after the atom bomb drops. The three survivors—Geraldine Page, Anthony Franciosa and Arthur O'Connell—do not appear to be concerned with the stark facts of life such as food, drink, shelter.

They are more bothered with self-deception, putting across unreal images of themselves. But sex is Topic A, even in a withered world. Only obvious element of play is its humor.

Rouben Ter-Arutunian has designed a strikingly stark set. Platform of two-by-threes represents the burned-out earth the protagonists use for a forum. The props include a wrecked taxicab; a legless enamelled bathtub and refrigerator in which clothing is kept (a la "Breakfast at Tiffany's"), and a broken clock, presumably to mean that time has stopped. There is also a life-size telephone pole upon which hangs the "Umbrella" and a pair of shoes; a blasted sewer entrance, a wheezy organ, a useless typewriter and sundry bits of rubble.

Aloft in the flies are five young men (angels without wings) who take choreographed positions representing members of some eternal stage crew—carpenter, electrician, soundman, and they even slither acrobatically down ropes to raise and lower the curtain.

The performances are top grade and the star power might even carry the work for a limited run. Geraldine Page is the former floozie who pretends to have been a nun in a New Orleans convent. Arthur O'Connell is a pilferer of petty cash who tries to behave like a tycoon and big-time swindler, and Anthony Franciosa is the GI, emasculated in a training camp accident, who passes himself off as a Don Juan and war hero.

Whether they are the last looney fugitives of the holocaust or three doomed souls living out some private hells of their own is not made clear. The writing is fairly pedestrian and the playwrights' theme is vastly bigger than the equipment they bring to it.

"The Umbrella" seems to be apparently everyone's need of a shelter. This ultimate message gets across in the inconclusive finale. As a symbol, however, the umbrella is woefully neglected during most of the drama's less than two-hours running time. The program adds to the general bewilderment by listing four players when only three appear.

There are two inescapable conclusions to be gained. "The Umbrella" is a highly dubious Broadway property, despite the persuasiveness of its stars, and it is an unlikely screen play.

Friedman & Son

San Francisco, Jan. 12.

Actor's Workshop presentation of three-act comedy by Mark Harris. Staged by Jules Irving; settings, Nell Finney; lighting, James McMillan. Opened Jan. 11, '62, at Marines Memorial Theatre, San Francisco; $3.50 top.

|---|---|

| Miss Prior | Kathe Chapman |
| Benjamin Waxman | Malcolm Smith |
| Miss Liberty | Sandra Ward |

Mark Harris, who has written a couple of funny novels, has now written a three-act comedy, and presumably has become aware of the fact that the stage is a different medium than fiction. "Friedman & Son" starts with the simple idea of a youngish, Jewish, intellectual son estranged from his canny father. A contemporary of the father goes to see the son with the plan of talking him into buying a "testimonial" banquet for the old man, thus reuniting them.

The first act consists almost entirely of dialog between the son and the go-between. The second act is all dialog between the father and the go-between. The third act brings the three principals together and includes surrealistic "banquet" characters, with son and father eventually achieving a new understanding.

The basic idea contains elements of "Abie's Irish Rose," of "The Matchmaker" and, above all, of Elick Moll's fine novel, "Seidman & Son." Developed simply and with dignity, it might have made an interesting theatrical evening.

Neither simplicity nor dignity is evident in this evening of windy and largely unfunny dialog, however. As a comedy, "Friedman & Son" falls flat.

The author has written lines which sound as if he'd memorized favorite vaudeville gags.

Mouthed by the go-between, in a quasi-Yiddish accent, the jokes raise only a few nervous titters. Even worse, possibly, the intellectual son is forced to mouth a lot of funny political idealism in a verbal denouement of the plot. Nowhere is it made clear that the real bond between father and son must be affection. Instead, the author says the tie is a devotion to truth, whatever that is.

As a result, neither the father, played by Roger DeKoven, nor the son, acted by Donald Buka, comes alive as a sympathetic character, and audience sympathy must focus on the crass, sparrow-like go between who wants to make a buck by arranging the testimonial. The latter role, somewhat overplayed by Wolfe Barzell, is the only human being on stage. All three major actors struggle manfully, but are beaten by the script.

The author's doubtful taste in his references to both Jews and "Jewishness" and director Jules Irving's extravagant miscalculation in placing an array of minor characters out beyond the stage are relatively unimportant matters, since the comedy doesn't come off in the first place.

Hotel Dinner-Legit Book Musicals Opening New Era for S.F. Show Biz

By BILL STEIF

San Francisco, Jan. 23.

A new phase in Frisco show business may be in prospect with the opening tonight (Tues.) of an after-dinner performance of "Guys and Dolls" as the initial production in the 600-seat Garden Court dining room of the Sheraton Palace Hotel. The show, produced by Russell Lewis and Howard Young, will cost $7.75 minimum, including dinner, with drinks extra. The exact dinner-show tab will depend on price of the entree.

The gross for the six weekly dinner shows should be around $32,000 a week, according to Lewis. It's figured drinks should add about $10,000 a week extra. Lewis doesn't say how the take will be cut up, but a good guess is that the producers can figure on just a little less than half of the total, including their share on drinks.

Lewis believes the fact that the big Sheraton chain has joined in this project has important implications all over the U.S. "Actors Equity has only a small percentage of its members working, and so does the musicians union," he says. "Hotels — downtown hotels — are looking for foot traffic, business that will brush off at night."

The producer believes that the combination of hungry theatrical workers and hungry hotels is a natural, that their interests are similar. And he notes that advance interest, and reservations with a $4-per-person deposit, are extraordinarily high. The implication, obviously, is that Sheraton execs are watching this Frisco experiment, and that other hotel chains may be, too.

The idea isn't new. Las Vegas hotels have been doing this for some years, using tab musicals, and the Meadowbrook Dinner Theatre, Cedar Grove, N.J., inaugurated a similar policy almost three years ago, followed by the Bradford Hotel, Boston. But this is the first time so big a factor in the hotel business as Sheraton has become involved. If it works in Frisco, it

Cliburn Oversubscribed As Ft. Wayne Disputes Use of Community Tag

Ft. Wayne, Jan. 23.

Some 300 persons are on the waiting list for memberships in Ft. Wayne Community Concerts, Inc., since the recent announcement that the forthcoming season will open with a recital by pianist Van Cliburn. Present subscribers may renew their memberships this month, but then the waiting list will be used for whatever vacancies occur. The four other subscription bookings will be announced when the membership drive officially opens.

Meanwhile, the competing concert-sponsoring group, headed by Hertha Duemling, who last fall resigned from the 31-year-old original group, suffered a setback in the courts when Judge Lloyd Hartzler granted an injunction to the Ft. Wayne Community Concerts, Inc., barring Mrs. Duemling's group from using the word Community in its name or in the solicitation of memberships for a competing series. Mrs. Duemling's group had been operating as the Community Concerts Assn. of Ft. Wayne.

The Columbia Artists Corp., New York booking agency, intervened as a party to the suit, claiming it held the sole right to license the use of the name. Ft. Wayne Community Concerts, Inc., countered with a plea in abatement, claiming the New York firm did not have the right to enter the suit, since it is an out-of-state corporation which has not qualified with the Secretary of State to do business in Indiana.

Judge Hartzler, in ruling on the Columbia Artists request for a counter restraining order to bar Ft. Wayne Community Concerts, Inc. from using the word Community in connection with its concert-sponsoring activities, again held for the plaintiffs, who will now continue to use the original name without competition.

However, a demurrer to the decision has been filed by Columbia Artists.

Margaret O'Brien Cast For Phoenix Yum-Yum

The Sombrero Playhouse, Phoenix, is presenting Margaret O'Brien in "Under the Yum-Yum Tree" this week as the second presentation in its 14th season. The Richard Charlton operation began its current semester Jan. 16 with Arlene Francis in "Old Acquaintance," which ended a week's run last Sunday (21).

Charlton asserts that the scheduled eight-week season of straight plays drew a record advance subscription sale of over $50,000. In addition to the dramatic productions, two musicals will be presented in March bringing the number of playing weeks for the season to 10. New to the staff of the 500-seat operation this year are Martin Egen, general manager, and Tommy Brent, pressagent. Jack McCullagh and Jack Welles are back as scenic designer and production stage manager.

Under consideration by Charlton for the future is an increase in the theatre's seating capacity and an extended season.

Leo Kerz Sues Randolph Hale

San Francisco, Jan. 23.

Producer Leo Kerz filed a $25,000 damage suit Friday (19) against Randolph Hale, charging that on closing night, Oct. 23, of "Rhinoceros" Hale did "strike, twist, jerk and push" Kerz while emitting a steady stream of profane language.

Kerz also filed a separate suit asking the court to make Hale, then operating the 1,147-seat Alcazar, account for $48,500 Kerz thinks he has coming from the show's three-week boxoffice take.

Kerz' main complaint charged Hale had made a "violent and unlawful" assault on him, and did "beat, bruise and batter" him in a "cruel, inhuman and shameful manner."

The suits stemmed for an incident between show's second and third acts on closing night, first reported in VARIETY. Hale said last weekend:

"Kerz wasn't here during the run. He came out for opening night, then went away and didn't come back until closing night. He left Eddie Choate here to run the show for him.

"That night he came into my office and asked for his share of the receipts. It wasn't very much, $1,514. Leo fired Eddie on the spot, refused to look at my accounting and rushed out. You see, he had flown the entire cast and scenery out from New York. This cost about $12,000. I put up this money and he agreed it would be deducted from the boxoffice during the run.

"He didn't want to do this, wanted me to pick up the transportation charge. He didn't even want to pay the ad bill here, said he needed the money to pay some bills in New York. But I paid the San Francisco bills."

'Do Re,' 'Advise' Set Same Date for Chi Openings

Chicago, Jan. 23.

Two touring legit shows will open here the night of Jan. 30, something that hasn't happened since the days when legit shows were plentiful in Chicago. David Merrick, who will be bringing in "Do Re Mi" from Toronto to launch the McVickers as a legit house, elected to open against "Advise and Consent" at the Blackstone because he didn't want to lose a performance. "Advise" can't change dates because it's a Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society subscription entry, and the booking was made long in advance.

The dual openings will undoubtedly divide the critics' turnout on that night, but the Merrick musical would seem to have the advantage for opening night coverage, inasmuch as there is a certain news value in the initiation of the McVickers, a former film house, to legit.

Get Out the Duster

Chapel Hill, N.C., Jan. 23.

Archibald Henderson, retired professor at the Univ. of North Carolina, has given the college drama department more than 400 rare and out-of-print books from his private collection.

Long associated with the drama department and the Carolina Playmakers, and a former author and literary critic, Dr. Henderson was one of the first to acclaim George Bernard Shaw as a great dramatic genius. He became Shaw's official biographer in 1904.

Legit Buff Sues To Get Tax Loss On Own Theatre

St. Paul, Jan. 23.

Local multimillionaire industrialist Archibald G. Bush and his wife Edyth, who own and operate the 275-seat Edyth Bush theatre here, have filed suit in Federal Court against the Internal Revenue Service, seeking $11,054 income tax reduction. The action charges the Government with refusing to allow the theatre's 1954 operating loss in that amount.

At a cost running into hundreds of thousands of dollars, Bush built the theatre 21 years ago for his wife's legit interest. Both are avid stage fans. He also considered it a civic project.

The theatre operates nearly the entire year around and presents mostly light plays with local casts. It advertises its offerings in the newspapers in the same fashion as touring stage productions.

Some of its 21 seasons have been profitable, but that of 1954 wasn't, according to the Bushes.

SAYS BILTMORE PIRATED Y. MONTAND CONTRACT

Los Angeles, Jan. 23.

Drama Productions Corp., operator of Huntington Hartford Theatre, charged that its deal for "An Evening With Yves Montand," to have started Feb. 26 at the Hunt-Hartford, had been pirated and French entertainer instead had been induced to appear for three weeks at the Biltmore Theatre, starting last Dec. 26.

In Superior Court suit filed Friday, (19) damages of $42,000 were asked. Named as defendants were Norman Granz, Montand, Salle Productions Inc., Jazz at the Philharmonic Inc., Jacques Canetti, James A. Doolittle and Greek Theatre Assn. Plaintiff also asked punitive damages of $25,000 from Doolittle and Greek Theatre Assn.

Complaint claimed that Doolittle and Greek Theatre Assn. had induced the "Granz defendants" to break their agreement with plaintiff and induce the "Granz defendants" to enter into a deal with Doolittle for Montand's three-week stand at Biltmore.

Name Vanessa Redgrave, Plummer as Best Actors

London, Jan. 23.

The performances of Vanessa Redgrave in "The Taming of the Shrew" and "The Lady from the Sea" were adjudged the best by an actress in the London Evening Standard's Drama Awards for 1961. Christopher Plummer in "Becket" was acclaimed the winner in the actor's category, and the Jean Anouilh drama was also selected by the panel as the best play of the year.

When it came to choosing the year's most promising playwright the accolade was shared between Gwyn Thomas for "The Keep" and Henry Livings for "Stop It, Whoever You Are" and "Big Soft Nellie." In only one category were the judges unanimous in their decision. They picked "Beyond the Fringe" as the best musical or revue.

The judges were film producer John Boulting, stage director Peter Hall, drama critics Philip Hope-Wallace and Milton Shulman, novelist-critic Elizabeth Jane Howard and the Editor of the Evening Standard as the non-voting chairman.

See Busy Road Again Next Season, With Lotsa Projects Already Set

By JESSE GROSS

The surge of legit activity on the road this season will apparently continue next semester on the basis of projects already in the works. Not only will there be some shows represented by two touring companies, as has been the case this season, but the possibility also exists of one Broadway click having three carbon copies on tour simultaneously.

Contemplating the four-company operation is "Mary, Mary," now in its 47th smash week at the Hayes the Hayes through all or most of next season, is thus far slated to have two touring editions in the '62-63 period. One will start out on the Coast and the other is being booked for a 30-week tour by Julian Olney's Dorian Attractions Inc.

The two road presentations of the Jean Kerr comedy will be produced by Stevens, who's also contemplating another company for the midwest if a desirable Chicago booking can be arranged. The "Mary" tour, which Olney is handling, is scheduled to begin Sept. 10. Also being booked by Dorian Attractions for next season are a second road company of "Sound of Music," "The Tenth Man" and "Shot in the Dark." Olney's operation concentrates mostly on split-week bookings.

Henry Guettel, currently represented on Broadway as co-producer of "Romulus" and on the road as co-producer of the second touring company of "Best Man," obtained permission to do "Sound" from the producers of the Broadway production, who've also got a touring company on the road. A could spread quickly to other Sheraton locations.

Lewis and Young are in position to stage musicals at the hotel be-

Dayton to Open Summer Season With 'Sergeants'

Dayton, Jan. 23.

The 1962 summer theatre season in the local Memorial Hall has been assured. The Montgomery County Commissioners reached an agreement last week with producer James Alex on the rental. The pact, to be signed by Feb. 1, guarantees a weekly rental of $1,500, the same as last year, but this year Alex will get the concession stand rights he demanded.

In return, the county will share in boxoffice receipts above $20,000 on each show, after taxes. The county will get 8% of the gross receipts between $20,000 and $25,000, and 4% of the gross above $25,000.

Alex said the 12-week season will open June 12 with "No Time for Sergeants," starring Jimmy Dean. "The extra time saved in signing an early contract is enabling me to bring in top stars," Alex says. Other shows will include "Annie Get Your Gun," starring Carol Burnett; "Showboat," with Dorothy Dandridge, and "Guys and Dolls," with Norwood Smith.

Because of a loss of over $60,000 on the 1961 season, Alex had refused to enter this season without the concession operation.

Dallas Musicals Still 70G Short

Dallas, Jan. 23.

There may be no Starlight Musicals season this summer unless local businessmen and firms pledge an additional $70,000 in underwriting within the next week. Under terms of a resolution adopted in mid-December by the State Fair board, the musicals have until Feb. 1 to obtain $100,000 in underwriting pledges. Less than $30,000 was promised by last week.

Tom Hughes, managing director of the Musicals, expressed confidence that Dallas would come through with the remaining underwriting, although the Fair absorbed the first $25,000 of the loss for last season, and won't do so this year.

"The State Fair is more important to Texas and Dallas than the State Fair Musicals," explains Fair president R. L. Thornton Sr. "Losses on the musicals for the last four years have totaled more than $300,000. I do not feel that the fair can jeopardize its own program by continuing to assume further responsibility." Although deficits on the Musicals for the last four seasons have totaled $312,000, a balance sheet since the summer shows started in 1941 reveals that total receipts exceeded total expenses through the 1959 season, despite losses of $69,000 in 1958 and $51,000 in 1959.

The most disastrous season came in 1960, when the deficit was $116,000. Last year, the Musicals cut the loss to $76,000, but the fair paid only $25,000 of this sum, the underwriters making up the difference.

Choristers Shrug Off Off-B'way, Stock Work

Members of Actors Equity apparently aren't particularly interested in chorus auditions for off-Broadway and stock productions. That's evident in a procedural change instituted by the Chorus Auditions Dept. of the union. The department, because of the small turnout of chorus members at off-Broadway and stock auditions, is no longer automatically sending notices of such sessions to singers and dancers registered for production audition information.

Members desiring notification by mail of off-Broadway and stock auditions now have to inform Florence Keezel, of the Chorus Auditions Dept. Information sheets in the Chorus Auditions Dept. will continue to list off-Broadway and stock chorus calls.

Off-Broadway and stock generally pay less than Broadway or the road.

'Kentucky' Outdoor Show Cost Louisville $33,813; No Plans for This Year

Louisville, Jan. 23.

"Bound for Kentucky," last summer's city-sponsored musical at the Iroquois Amphitheatre, had a $33,813 deficit. Only $7,000 of the money was designated as an outright contribution to the outdoor production, while the remaining $28,813 was to be repaid if and when finances of the operation would permit.

No money will be paid back according to Maurice Settle, treasurer and business manager of the non-profit corporation which produced the play. He says that the accounts are closed out.

The local government gets several thousand dollars worth of costumes and stage equipment, which were turned over to the Division of Recreation. They are now on loan to various dance and recreation groups.

The presentation of "Bound for Kentucky" was an outgrowth of former Mayor Hoblitzell's determination that the city-owned amphitheatre should not be dark for the second summer in a row. It was produced by a corporation headed by a former Kentucky congressman, and officers included many locally prominent people. Ticket sales totaled $44,250. An additional $35,000 was received on program advertising.

No plans are in the works for use of the 3,500-seat Amphitheatre next summer. City director of Recreation will have talks with the new Mayor as to its possible use.

Herman Kogan to Head Chi News Arts Section

Chicago, Jan. 23.

Herman Kogan, former drama critic of the Chicago Sun-Times and more recently with the Encyclopaedia Britannica, will take a post with the afternoon Daily News as cultural editor. He starts Feb. 1.

The newly created post will put Kogan in charge of all cultural departments, including drama, art, music, books and television, and the paper's present reviewing staff will report directly to him. Kogan will be working for his old boss, Marshall Field, who publishes both the News and Sun-Times.

Constance Bennett's TV Interview

Star Claims Self Misquoted—Bloomgarden Investigates —Herewith The Transcript

Constance Bennett, recently starring in Lillian Hellman's "Toys In The Attic" at the Blackstone, Chicago, appeared on the Irv Kupcinet WBBM television program, "At Random" and talked freely about the play. Thereby hangs a sequel in the form of a dispute. These facts follow:

(1) VARIETY published a news report on the interview.

(2) Miss Bennett wired VARIETY denying the implications of having panned her own starring vehicle. Said she, "No quotes about the play set forth in your article were mine.."

(3) Ann Shropshire has replaced Miss Bennett and the show proceeds west to Los Angeles where, as far as known to the contrary, Kupcinet's program is still aired off tape.

(4) Kermit Bloomgarden, the play's producer, has been interviewing all sorts of executives, critics and personages in Chicago to establish the facts and determine his own action, which might include an appeal to Actors Equity.

Miss Bennett's telegram to this weekly stated: "I demand that you print this in your next edition, as the article is extremely damaging to a powerful play as well as rude to a great and talented playwright and defaming to me."

Kupcinet apparently stalled Bloomgarden's desire to view until kinescope of the interview until Miss Bennett had gotten out of town. The prose transcript of the program, with intonations naturally absent, runs as follows:

Kup: Constance, you're appearing in a show here that I know hasn't given you too much pleasure, and it's kind of unusual and only because you're so frank do I ask you this. You're in "Toys In The Attic" and it doesn't give you much pleasure, how do you perform every night? That's an awful burden I must assume for a person who isn't happy in her role?

Bennett: Well, it isn't a case of not being happy in a role, Kup. It's a case of when you do an exercise, which this is, an exercise in acting, when you leave the theatre it's like leaving school, you're through with those lessons and that thesis that you're doing. I'm not unhappy in the role, I just don't particularly — Bertson, my manager, Jeffrey Bauer in New York decided that I should change my image. (Laughing) I'm going to change his when I get back.

Kup: What image did he want to change?

Bennett: Well he decided that I played too much comedy and, therefore, he wanted me to play a dramatic role. "Because, he said, you're getting nothing but comedy scripts sent to you and I want you to have some dramatic scripts sent to you." So, I fussed and fumed, and didn't think that this was the kind of a play that can go into towns where there are only one or two theatres. Chicago's a town that can have it because they have three or four theatres, and then people can have a choice, but it's a heavy drama and people around the world—Today there's enough heavy drama going on and they don't want to see it.

Kup: Would you call it "sick" theatre, of which we had so much this year?

Bennett: I would call it "sick" theatre, because I think that the theme is sick and there's so much sickness in the world I don't think that it should be forced on people as entertainment. Although, I'll tell you one thing about it, you can never get away from the fact that Miss Hellman is a very powerful and very wonderful writer. If people think they're sick, which they aren't, they should come to see "Toys In The Attic" and alleviate all of their pain.

Jessel: Can I have a word on this now? I'm in full accord with what Constance says about the play. It's a very well written play, but I often find times, and I've been very melancholy, I haven't written a snicide letter in over three days now, but no one in this play, with the possible exception of the boy who comes to deliver some groceries or something in the early moment, has any smile upon . . . these—These are all violently, unhappy people. Now we do know that they exist and perhaps they outmeasure the ones that are happy, but surely someone is happy in every book. And, therefore, everybody—There is the one sister, they're two old maids, and one has had no life of any kind, and the other is secretly in love with her brother; there is the part that Constance plays, including an illicit life in the play with a fancy ma'', etc.,—

Bennett: And he's colored.

Jessel: Yes, and everybody is just terribly unhappy. In fact, the doorman bit me as I got into the cab. So I can understand that, and incidentally I was just looking at that closeup of you Constance and you look like Dietrich when she was 40 years younger. You look about twenty years old.

Kup: Georgie and Constance, (Harold Clurman?) said to me today that the theatre today is suffering from logical businessmen and neurotic playwrights, and the theatre had better get off the couch because people are sick of it.

Bennett: Well, I don't think that there are too many neurotic playwrights, as a matter of fact, the trouble is some of the comedies don't get on because people think . . . because the neurotic playwrights are such great playwrights, you see. Now, why can't, Miss Hellman, who has great talent, turn that talent into something happy?

Jessel: Well, didn't she write "The Children's Hour"?

Bennett: You call that happy?

Jessel: Well, she just happens to write about people violently unhappy.

Bennett: She has talent. If an actress, as an actor or an actress—

Jessel: You can play any part?

Bennett: That's right. Why can't a playwright write happier—

Burr Tilstrom: Would you call Lillian Hellman a neurotic playwright?

Bennett: No, but she writes neurotic plays.

Kup: I think we're talking about the Tennessee Williams and—

Bennett: Yes, he writes neurotic plays.

Jessel: Yes, but there are many. Clurman is a—

Bennett: (laughing) A neurotic director.

Jessel: No, But nobody can make any precedent about the theatre anymore than you can do about anything that the public pays for. Not this 'mishigass,' but—But you can't say there are too many of them. "Bye, Bye Birdie" is a great success and it's not unhappy and the Hal March play—

Bennett: "Come Blow Your Horn"

Jessel: That's a hit and it isn't unhappy and "Mary, Mary" is a light comedy and—

Spreading Sensitivity

Milwaukee, Jan. 23.

Chester Morris acting Senator Orin Knox in "Advise and Consent," at the Pabst Theatre said (in a press interview) "politics is a dirty game" in both real life or as portrayed in the play—on stage.

Stated Morris: "We got a lot of criticism showing polities as a dirty business. Politics is a dirty game. There are plenty of examples about us."

Milwaukee County Executive Doyne sent Morris a two-page letter, asking Morris to check things at Milwaukee's Courthouse and see facts on Milwaukee's clean public service. Though having tickets for opening night, Doyne refused to see "Advise and Consent," after reading Morris' comments.

Concert Review

Esterhazy Orchestra

(TOWN HALL, N. Y.)

Youth held center stage at Town Hall on Tuesday last. A 27-year old conducted teenage works of Mozart and Schubert. And perhaps youngest of all, Madame Rosina Lhevinne, age 80, played Mozart on the piano.

The Esterhazy Orchestra, a chamber group supported by a foundation of the same name, was recently founded for the perpetuation of 18th century music, with a particular bow to Franz Josef Haydn. The group should be welcomed as a noteworthy addition to our musical culture. (To our shame, they announce two forthcoming American "premieres" of Haydn symphonies!) It is not possible, however, to give this enterprise full praise.

David Blum, musical director, conducts with presence and a dedicated manner. But critics should keep their eyes closed. Unfortunately he has not yet molded an instrument worthy of his high aims, though the evening began auspiciously with Mozart's Divertimento, K.138 in F Major. Even forgetting that it was written by a 16-year old, this is a startling piece —sweet, blissful and delightful. With obvious devoutness and gentleness, Blum wrung from his musicians all of the youthful poetry of it. It soon became apparent, however, that romantic sweetness is his sole interest. His sound was indiscriminately muted. If Mozart can be compared to a sparkling crystal chandelier, Blum gave only soft candlelight. Even young Mozart has dynamics. Lacking also is a forthrightly emphasis on the embellishments which Mozart uses for shape and structure, so that a general formlessness prevails.

Rosina Lhevinne provided the evening's highlight with her mellow interpretation of the Mozart Piano Concerto No. 21. Her reading, too, fell into warmth and softness instead of high clarity.

After the intermission came the Schubert Symphony No. 5, which lacked lyrical sweep in its playing. This music should be bounding in its questions and answers. It was boyish instead of manly; hummed rather than sung. The lack of well-considered changes of intensity—so obviously called for by Schubert's major and minor interplays—left unexpressed the composer's statement. This could only lead to one result: an uninspired performance.

The evening closed with a Bach chorale prelude: "Liebster Jesu, wir sind hier," which proved one further point: the beginning and end of conducting is a decisive beat. All of Blum's charm cannot hide his lack of one. Keane.

Robert Holley Producer Of Indpls. Summer Sked

Indianapolis, Jan. 23.

Robert Bruce Holley, formerly co-producer with John Sacco, has been named producer of Starlight Musical here for summer season of 1962. The staff also will include Robert L. Young Jr. as assistant manager and Mary Helen Kelly as promotions director, both holdovers from last year. Starlight is operating a year-around office for the first time.

The job of executive director to which Sacco was named last spring has been eliminated. Holley will set up New York office shortly to arrange scheduling and casting.

The Hostage

Norma Frances, Robert Margulies & Bell Productions presentation of a three-act comedy-drama by Brendan Behan. Staged by Perry Bruskin; setting and lighting, Karl Huegliu; costumes, Margaret Bury. Opened Dec. 12, '61, at One Sheridan Square, N.Y.; $4.50 top.

Cast: Alan Nunn, Paddy Croft, Norman Roland, Kathleen Roland, Margo Burnett, Ral Saunders, James Cahill, Lloyd Beachner, Patricia Ripley, Geoff Garland, Jane McArthur, William H. Bassett, Vince O'Connor, Richard Sabol, Bill Johnson.

Vigor is the keynote of the revival of Brendan Behan's "The Hostage" at the basement playhouse at One Sheridan Square. Squalor and filth vie with heroics and noble sentiment, the dirty joke contrasts with thrusts of rapier-like wit. There are singing and caterwauling, shouts of jingoistic fervor and the cynic's sneer.

Perry Bruskin has expertly staged "The Hostage," infusing it with dark humors. As the young British soldier who is on the losing end of the exchange, Geoff Garland has ingenuously amusing appeal. Jane McArthur is all charm as the Irish lass who loves the lad.

Alan Nunn, as the "lodging house" keeper, has corner-of-the-mouth cynicism. Paddy Croft is crustily down-to-earth as his prostie wife, Norman Roland has the grand style as a kilted, senile ex-officer, while Patricia Ripley's angularity and pruney dryness as a "sociable" worker is the match of Behan's sneers. Geor.

The Apple

Living Theatre presentation of drama in three acts by Jack Gelber. Staged by Judith Malina; scenery, Julian Beck; lighting, Nicola Cernovich. Features Julian Beck, Marilyn Chris, John A. Coe, Marion Jim, James Earl Jones, Fred Miller, Henry Proach. Opened Dec. 7, '61, at the Living Theatre, N.Y.; $4.50 top.

At the close of Jack Gelber's "The Apple," the audience is told to come back, but "only if you want something," What that somethings might be is an explanation of the play, but it is unlikely that a return visit to the Living Theatre would provide the answer.

"The Apple" is more a series of macabre sketches than a cohesive drama. It is filled with lines and characters no doubt meant to shock and edify, but which succeed only in mystifying. There are so many levels of action, so many blackouts and quick changes of context that the audience is lost in a maze of incomprehensibilities.

The characters include, predictably, a Negro, a Jew, a homosexual, a bigot and a pair of sluts. Presumably intended as comic relief, there is a spastic who spills his food, is forced to dance, and is the object of constant ridicule. What all these people are doing together is not explained, and although they talk about themselves endlessly, they reveal nothing about themselves.

During the course of the evening, animal masks are donned, an abstract painting is auctioned, a man who is dead but not dead goes mad, and the spastic turns out to be not spastic after all.

The seven-member cast seems to be talented and possibl actors and director Judith Malina know what is going on. But the audience does not share the knowledge. Kenn.

Signs Along the Cynic Route

Precarious Productions presentation of a revue in two acts, with sketches by Will Holt and Dolly Jonah; music and lyrics by Will Holt. Staged by Walt Witcover; lighting, Gene Tunezi; graphics, Milton Glaser; musical direction, Don Evans. Features Will Holt, Dolly Jonah, Robert Barend. Opened Dec. 14, '61, at the Actor's Playhouse, N.Y.; $4.90 top weekends, $3.90 weeknights.

"Signs Along the Cynic Route" is an unpretentious little revue that is full of warmth and goodwill, but short of sharpness and originality. Although it is amiably performed and often entertaining, it is too light for a full evening.

Dolly Jonah, a tall blonde with a hint of Carol Channing, knows how to make the most of every laugh, and Will Holt is a young man with a pleasant manner and a good sense of timing. They wrote lightweight sketches. Despite the show's title, there is little cynicism evident, and few fresh points of view.

Only occasionally is the material fresh and unexpected. When Holt, as a New England-bred aristocrat, teaches Miss Jonah, his showgirl bride, how to play croquet, the revue comes to life. When "The Threepenny Opera" is transposed to Hollywood, the message comes through. But too many of the numbers are old hat and overlong.

Miss Jonah and Holt are aided in the performance by Robert Barend, a man with a rubber face and a keen sense of comedy. Walt Witcover's staging keeps things moving.

The only real lapse of taste is the closing number, a morbid, offensive comment on what are described as World War III songs. Kenn.

The Ticket-of-Leave Man

John M. Grissmer & William F. DeSeta presentation of a melodrama in four acts by Tom Taylor. Staged by Robert Moore; sets and lighting, Edward Garzero; costumes, Joseph Lewis; original songs, Edward Cashman. Features Philip Bosco, Mary Harrigan, James Forster, Joseph Plummer, William Cottrell, Marion Morris, Byron Webster, Henry Sutton, Kevin Mitchell, Robert A. Worms, Mary Jane Milli. Opened Dec. 22, '61, at the Midway Theatre, N.Y.; $4.90 top weekends, $4.50 weeknights.

Cast: Robert A. Worms, Philip Bosco, William Cottrell, James Forster, Joseph Plummer, Mary Harrigan, Mary Jane Milli, Byron Webster, Marion Morris, Kevin Mitchell, Henry Sutton, John Loose, Brian Rodner Dan Baileys, Carla Shearer, Joan Murray, Dan Finkelstein.

Although "The Ticket-of-Leave Man" was meaningful social drama in 1863, it is pure corn today. But everyone connected with the current revival at the Midway Theatre obviously knows it, and treats the museum-piece with irreverent good humor. The result is an amusing, chuckle-filled evening.

The melodrama was written by Tom Taylor, author of "Our American Cousin," the play Lincoln was watching when he was assassinated. The central character is Hawkshaw, a detective who always gets his man, except when its right under his nose.

Hawkshaw's one aim in life is to capture Jim Dalton, the criminal who killed the detective's partner. But the villain eludes the detective, and the wrong man is sent to prison.

The play's title refers to the innocent victim's parole papers, the ticket-of-leave he is given when released from prison. Although he and his Pollyannaish sweetheart attempt to make a new life for themselves, they are hounded by the villain.

The hokum-filled plot is played with tongue-in-cheek finesse by the expert cast and under the knowing direction of Robert Moore. The performance is neither too farcical nor too straight

As Hawkshaw, Philip Bosco is the perfect combination of hero and clod. Mary Harrigan is fine as the heroine. Joseph Plummer is suitably simple-minded as her sweetheart, and James Forester is good as the villain. Mary Jane Milli, Byron Webster, Kevin Mitchell, and especially Marion Morris as a landlady, are good in smaller roles.

Edward Garzero's inventive sets make the small stage seem spacious, and Joseph Lewis's costumes are fine. The original songs, by Edward Cashman, are entertaining, particularly "The Maniac's Tear," the sad lament of a woman who put her children out with the empties.

Although the last 10 rows of seats at the Midway are raised on a platform, the stage is so low that visibility is limited. Kenn.

Poppa Is Home

Quaker Productions presentation of drama in three acts by Monroe Schneier. Staged by Robert T. Seymour; settings and lighting, Fred Sammut; costumes, Dina Harris. Opened Dec. 19, '61, at the Gate Theatre, N.Y.; $3.95 top.

Cast: Linda Marsh, Estelle Ritchie, Adelaide Klein, Walter Miller, Philip Fox, Max Gulack, John Anthony Zee, Theo Goetz, Gian Sciandra, Esther Benson, Robert Stevenson, Pete Roman.

In the program notes to "Poppa Is Home" it's asserted that author "is probably the first chiropractor turned playwright in the theatre's history." In view of the soap opera level of Schneier's script, it appears that history should have quit when it was ahead.

Poppa comes home from the hospital, wheelchair-bound and unable to talk. This is a great gimmick for the rest of the actors in the play because individually they can enter and deliver monologs to the script's captive audience of one.

It seems that collectively and individually the family's life is a mess. Greed, bitterness and un-

Chris Plummer to Star At Stratford (Ont.) Fest

Toronto, Jan. 23.

Christopher Plummer will return as star at the Stratford (Ont.) Shakespearean Festival next summer. For its 10th season, the Festival will present "Macbeth," "The Tempest," "The Taming of the Shrew," opening respectively June 18-19-20, plus "Cyrano de Begerac" to be added to the repertory July 30. No one except Plummer has been cast.

Michael Langham, artistic director of the Festiyal, will stage two of the plays, with George McCowan and Peter Coe to direct the others. Designers will be Tanja Moiseiwitsch, Brian Jackson, Desmond Heeley and Mark Negin. The 1962 season will run 15 weeks.

Plummer will be appearing for his fifth season at the Festival. Among his assignments have been the title roles in "Henry V" and "Hamlet," and leading parts in "Twelfth Night," "Henry IV, Part I," "Much Ado About Nothing," "Romeo and Juliet" and "King John." The actor is currently co-starring in "Becket" in London.

Paper Apologizes for Threat'

London Daily Express Disavows Intention of Closing Sherek Show, It's In the Bag

London, Jan. 23.

There was a sequel to a Daily Express drama review published in May 1960 in the High Court here last week, when impresario Henry Sherek was given an apology on behalf of the paper.

Sherek's counsel said that May 25, 1960, "It's in the Bag" was presented at the Duke of York's theatre, and the next day the Express published an unfavorable review. "Included in this review," the lawyer added, "was a comment which suggested that if the play was still on after a week the critic would write about it again, and really be rude."

The producer took the view that a deliberate threat had been made to drive his production off the stage, and immediately commenced libel action against Beaverbrook Newspapers, publishers of the Express.

"Beaverbrook Newspapers now wished to make it clear," counsel asserted, "that the observation to which Sherek had taken exception was never intended to be understood in a literal sense. They also wished to express to Sherek their sincere regret that this was not made clear to readers, and to withdraw it unreservedly."

Counsel for the paper said that while they maintained their right to publish criticism which may, on occasion, be harsh, they did recognize that any attempt to drive this production off the stage, would not have been justified. Beaverbrook Newspapers and their critic never sought to do so, and apologized for any embarrassment caused by any contrary impression created.

(The Express apology to Sherek apparently has not been published, but must have been issued in the form of a letter, presumably with the right of public announcement. —Ed.)

Sues 'Succeed' Authors, Producers and Lawyers Over Musical's Rights

Musical director Herbert Greene, who co-produced "The Music Man" on Broadway, claims he's the owner of the production rights to "How To Succeed in Business Without Really Trying." He makes the allegation in a suit in N. Y. Supreme Court against Cy Feuer & Ernest H. Martin, co-producers of "Succeed"; Willie Gilbert and Jack Weinstein, co-authors of the musical with Abe Burrows, and Howard E. Reinheimer, Irving Cohen and Albert I. da Silva, partners in the law firm of Reinheimer & Cohen.

"Succeed" has been a steady sellout at the 46th St. Theatre, N. Y., where it's now in its 16th week. Greene alleges that he originally had a deal with Gilbert and Weinstock to produce their adaptation of "Succeed," based on Shepherd Mead's book of the same name. His complaint charges that nevertheless, the production rights were given to Feuer and Martin who, he alleges, had knowledge of his interest in the property.

He asserts that he had retained the law firm of Reinheimer and Cohen to represent him in negotiations to acquire the production rights to "Succeed," but that they were subsequently retained by Feuer and Martin for the same purpose. Reinheimer and Cohen, according to Greene, failed to notify him that Feuer and Martin were seeking and then had procured the production rights.

The suit seeks to restrain the defendants from continuing the musical at the 46th St. and from producing any other editions of the show. Also sought is an accounting of profits earned by the production thus far.

'Wagon' Preview to Open Annual ELT Fund Drive

Equity Library Theatre will launch its annual fund-raising campaign Feb. 25 with a benefit preview of its forthcoming revival of "Paint Your Wagon," to be presented at the Masters Institute Theatre, N.Y.

A special souvenir program will be sold.

Gently Does It

The drama critics for the N.Y. Times and the N.Y. Herald Tribune were in a mellow mood recently for shows that did not fully meet their approval. In his Jan. 11 review Howard Taubman ended his reaction with the comment, "Let us be grateful for 'Romulus,' for a witty, slashing half-play assuredly is better than none."

The following morning Walter F. Kerr was enthused about only one of the three Thornton Wilder offerings in the off-Broadway "Plays for Bleecker Street" trilogy. He ended his notice of the one-acters, "Infancy," "Childhood" and "Someone From Assisi," with the summation, "Let us simply be thankful for the curious memory called "Childhood."

HARRIS MASTERSON ON SILLMAN'S OWN SHARE

Frank Productions Inc., is not connected with the Broadway-bound presentation of "Leonard Sillman's New Faces of '62" as erroneously stated in last week's VARIETY. The reference to the organization getting a percentage of the revue's gross for "its advise and consultation on music and production of the show" related to an arrangement connected with a previously planned edition of "New Faces," which failed to materialize.

Harris Masterson, co-producer of the revue, currently trying out at the Cass Theatre, Detroit, also states in a wire to VARIETY that the 1½% of the show's gross, which the paper reported Sillman gets for the use of the "New Faces" trademarks, does not go to Sillman. According to Masterson, Sillman owns one-half of New Faces, Inc., but all proceeds at present go to other stockholders.

In regard to the $5,000 fee and 2% of the gross to Sillman as director, Masterson asserts it goes to Sillman Enterprises, of which Sillman is general partner. He also states that the setup of "New Faces," which is scheduled to open Feb. 1 at the Alvin Theatre, N. Y., calls for the backers to get back their investment before Sillman participates. Masterson couldn't be reached to clarify the exact nature of the participation referred to by him.

Explaining Williams

London, Jan. 16.

"On April Fool's Day, 1945, Tennessee Williams, after more than 15 years of minor victories and crushing failures, found himself in the bewildering but extremely pleasant role of an overnight success." "The Glass Menagerie" had clicked.

That sentence from "Tennessee Williams" by Benjamin Nelson (Peter Owen, $3.50) aptly sums up the years of frustration and inner doubts that have assailed Williams during his up-and-down career. Later was to come "Streetcar Named Desire" and then a series of plays which were received with less than enthusiasm until "Cat On A Hot Tin Roof" put him on top of the world again.

In this informative and analytical study the author is frank in his appraisements, both praise and blame, of Williams' various plays. But for many, the most absorbing part of a worthwhile book are the early chapters which skillfully show the birth of Tennessee Williams as a writer, the influence of his sister on his life and also his dislike, amounting to hatred, of his father. He shows how Williams became the complete introspective so that there was nothing in life for him but to write, endlessly, incessantly.

Nelson has written a very readable and thoughtful book about one of the outstanding, provocative figures of the theatre. Rich.

Dick Hoover Will Get Pitt Jr. C. of C. Award

Pittsburgh, Jan. 23.

Dick Hoover, general manager of the Pittsburgh Playhouse, will be given a special award for his contribution to the theatre at the "Man of the Year" dinner to be staged Jan. 29 by the Junior Chamber of Commerce at the Pittsburgh Hilton Hotel.

He has headed the Playhouse for 23 years, except for two years at the Civic Theatre, Indianapolis.

Pick Committee For Equity Vote

The Actors Equity nominating committee has been set to select candidates to fill 18 council posts up for election this year. The report of the committee is due on or before Feb. 6 and the election will be conducted by mail referendum following the union's annual meeting March 23. Ballots are to be returned no later than five weeks after that.

The nominating committee consists of 15 members, 5 of whom were selected by the council and the other 10 elected at the recent Equity membership meeting. The council appointees are Jane White, chairman; Lois Wilson, Crandall Diehl, Stephen Douglass, and Robert Flavelle. Those elected at the membership meeting in the category of principal performers were George Voskovec, Lillian Gish, Nancy Pollock, William Tabbert, Howard DaSilva, Salem Ludwig and Lorraine MacMartin.

Elected at the meeting as members performing chorus work were Anthony Gardell, Ronald Lee and Socrates Birsky. The councillors whose terms expire this year are Conrad Bain, Theodore Bikel, Kendall Clark, Hume Cronyn, John Cornell, Staats Cotsworth, Norma Doggett, Ruth Gillette, Jack Leigh, James MacArthur, Howard Roberts, Mary Roche, Anthony Saverino, Bill Shirley, Jean Sincere, Margot Stevenson, Stanley Tackney and Lee Tracy. None of the officers' terms expire this year.

Equity is still studying the possible adoption of a new procedure whereby the nominating committee would be elected by the membership on somewhat the same basis as the election of officers and councillors.

Annual Outdoor Drama On History of Maryland

Baltimore, Jan. 23.

Plans for an open air theatre with seating capacity of 2,000 and featuring an annual large-scale drama based on early Maryland history have been announced by the Maryland Historical Drama Assn. The group headed by Elmer M. Jackson Jr. has met with Governor Tawes to discuss the project which would be in the Sandy Point State Park at the western approach to the Chesapeake Bay Bridge.

The committee hopes to start construction next summer. The state is to build the amphitheatre as part of Sandy Point Improvement program and will lease it to the non-profit organization.

A $300,000 construction figure in the capital improvements request of the Department of Forests & Parks has been submitted to the Governor and the State Planning Commission. The Drama Association expects to raise $40,000 for production costs through sale of stock.

The show to be called "Flame of Freedom," is by Ray Hamby and is based on actual events in the founding of the state. It will have an original score. There will probably be a cast of over 100 actors, singers and dancers performing the piece six nights a week for 10 weeks each summer.

Old Log, Minneapolis Sets Three Productions

The Old Log Theatre, Minneapolis, opens a winter season tomorrow night (Thurs.) with "Invitation to a March." That production will be followed Feb. 8 by "Sailor Beware" and Feb. 22 by "A Cook for Mr. General."

The set designer for the three productions is Peter Wingate, who designed the sets, costumes and lighting for the productions last season of the Phoenix Theatre, N.Y.

Dance Reviews

Midsummer Night's Dream

(N. Y. City Ballet)

George Balanchine, the Leningrad Kirov's unintended gift to American culture, is a choreographer of such sure invention that almost anything he undertakes is rife with wonder. This remains true even when that mouldy chestnut of Shakespeare, "Midsummer Night's Dream," intrigues, and somewhat squanders, the Balanchine talent. The fantasy is a bit of a strain at the present period and not the least of the tribute to this evening-long event is that it nearly, not quite, manages to keep boredom at bay.

The production is sumptious, especially for a company that typically reduces scenery to suggestion and costumes to nothing much. David Hays has the forest imagery well organized and lighted and Barbara Karinska has dressed the ensemble and principals charmingly.

Why Balanchine chose, after 40 minutes of straight dancing, to introduce singing voices (Veronica Taylor, Marija 'Kova, Beverly Evans, Helen Guille, Hanna Owen, Charlotte Povia) must qualify as his own private aberration since it serves no purpose and merely raises the question. A second regrettable lapse of taste is the inclusion from the School of the American Ballet of a small mob of children. The fact is again confirmed that "kids is amateurs," as somebody should have said, and probably did. The voices and the dancing school students are enough to make the N. Y. City Center seem, for some moments, like the Metropolitan Opera House.

The N. Y. City Ballet is so superbly professional that juxtaposing its members with trainees is curiously indecent. For an opening night at $50 a seat, for sweet culture's sake, amateurs simply don't belong on stage. Worst of all, the first figures seen are these very amateurs! They seem neither needed for the ballet nor tolerable in an undertaking of such artistic pretension. A program note speaks of "Midsummer Night's Dream" as "the most ambitious production" ever presented by the company. It well may be, though the comment is seemingly neglectful of the annual "Nutcracker" production. Of course the latter does not give the dancers, and the pit, a vapor bath!

Felix Mendelsohn's music is borrowed for the occasion. Lovely, of course, except that his too-familiar "Wedding March," more stereotyped in our day than "Rudolf, the Red-Nosed Reindeer," is pretty corny, coming in a Balachine work. Whole second act is a curious one. Story-line is completed, the complications reduced to resolution when the first act is done. What follows is an afterpiece, no more. The effect is like a play which lowers the curtain on the lovers' clinch, then adds their marriage vows as postscript. Right here, of course, is what's basically unsatisfactory about the evening-long ballet. There's a lot of wonderful dancing, and then anti-climax. Why go beyond the story-line, even in, or perhaps especially in, a ballet?

There are several fine individual performances, though essentially this one is a group achievement. Edward Villela, whose progress is a matter of general comment this season, is splendid as Oberon. Melissa Hayden as his somewhat petulant queen is always a fine artist. This is not, however, one of her great showcases. The figure who may shine brightest, in terms of personal advancement, is the Negro member, Arthur Mitchell, who makes of the elf, Puck, a deliciously gay figure.

Conrad Ludlow after playing the Fairy Queen's Cavalier in Act I substituted at the premiere for ligament-victim Jacques d'Amboise in the duet with Violette Verdy. A very competent dancer he proves himself under this dual burden.

The ballet is paced for speed. The story, however silly it is, is told with imagination and finesse. The beholder is repeatedly impressed by the discipline, the mass patterns, the crisp lines, the superb professionalism. Land.

Boris Tumarin will direct "The Merchant of Venice," in which he'll appear as Shylock, for a Feb. 2-March 4 presentation at the Gate Theatre, N.Y.

Dancers of Bali

Chicago, Jan. 12.

Paul Szilard presentation (in association with the American National Theatre and Academy) of a folkloric dance revue. Scenery and lighting and costumes supervised by Thomas Skelton. Opened U.S. tour Arie Crown Theatre, McCormick Place, Chicago, Jan. 12, '62; $2 top.

The supple Dancers of Bali debuted their subtle art and artistry in the cavernous 5,000-seat Arie Crown Theatre and despite the delicacy of their hand foot movements they maintained a high focus of attention both visually and aurally. Colorfully clad in gold-bedecked costumes, the lithe girls and facile young men surely and gracefully interpreted the legends and folklore of Bali in dance. Although the seemingly strict ethnic interpretations do not make for some of the excitement that other national dance groups frequently interpolate, the apparent authenticity comes through strongly in building and sustaining an exotic tone and setting. The on-stage troupe consists of a 20-piece percussion orchestra, 15 female dancers and 15 males.

High spots were provided by solos by 74-year-old Mario (an astoundingly resilient sort of Far East Nijinsky), a fascinatingly wild and whimsical monkey dance by Mario's protege, I Gusti Raka, and the charming classical Legong dance as done by three pre-teen girls.

The Bali dancers last appeared in Chicago in 1957 for a shorter run and in a smaller hall, and it remains to be seen whether they have a sufficiently broad appeal to justify a 17-day stay. It's appeal to devotees of ethos and terpsichore is undeniable, but it's certainly not Everyman's cup of Java. Mor.

L.A. TIMES NIXES ADS QUOTING EDNA MILLAY

Hollywood, Jan. 16.

The Los Angeles Times last week rejected three small ads for "Conversation at Midnight," a legit production at the Civic Playhouse here. No reason was given to the producers for the action. The proposed ads, offered for the Sunday, Wednesday and Thursday editions of the Times, were not submitted to the other downtown dailies.

Each of the ads contained a line from the Edna St. Vincent Millay play, a different line in each case. The first reads, "I can't make love to a woman I really respect. Why, she might be thinking, or something, and it gets in your way."

The second goes, "A man may go to his first war out of confusion; but to go to war twice indicates either callousness or vice." The third is, "Give us this day our daily slop—that's the earnest prayer of the advertisement-reader." The quotes are from characters in the play, and were so indicated in the copy.

Rave notices were given the production by Times staffers Cecil Smith and Charles Stinson, with specific references to the "marvelous poetic imagery," "wry thrust" and "beautiful verse" of the late Miss Millay's play language.

APA Group Lost 27G At Miller Theatre, M'waukee

Milwaukee, Jan. 23.

The Fred Miller Theatre lost about $27,000 during its 10-week fall season featuring the Assn. of Producing Artists. Emphasis was on the classic plays during the visiting troupe's engagement which ended Dec. 23.

Plays given were "Midsummer Night's Dream," "The Tavern," "School for Scandal," "The Seagull" and "Fashion." According to Joyce Henry, Fred Miller general manager, the attendance ran about 40%-50% of house potential capacity.

A new resident company of 11 is currently offering Pirandello's "Six Characters in Search of an Author," through Feb. 4, having opened Jan. 16. It closed "The Matchmaker," Jan 14. To follow are "The Taming of the Shrew," Feb. 6-25; "The Crucible," Feb 27-March 18; "Charley's Aunt," March 20-April 8; "Streetcar Named Desire," April 10-29, and an unspecified musical as the season finale.

Opportunity—At Minimum

The following editorial comment appears in the current (January) issue of Equity, the official publication of Actors Equity:

"New approach to casting was announced by Garson Kanin for his forthcoming productions, 'The Last of the Wine' and 'Come on Strong.' Circulars distributed to offices by Kanin stated: 'Due to the size of the cast and production, we are making a fast rule that all actors other than the two stars (who are already set) will be engaged at the minimum union scale. Almost all of the roles in the play will afford an excellent opportunity for young or hitherto unknown actors to reveal their talents . . .'

"Attached to this cheery message was a breakdown of the cast. It called for: an actor in his early 60s who speaks perfect French; another actor in his 50s; an actress, late 40s or 50s, perfect French; another actor in his 50s, another an 'exuberant' 41; a couple of others in their 40s, and some others who speak perfect French. Helen Clayton is the casting director, in charge of handing out these juicy plums to the 'young or hitherto unknown actors' in search of experience."

Kanin is director of "The Last of the Wine," now titled "A Gift of Time," in which Henry Fonda and Olivia de Havilland will costar. It's being produced by William Hammerstein, in association with David Shaw and William Snyder Jr. "Come on Strong," in which Carroll Baker and Van Johnson are to costar, was written by Kanin and will be staged by him. The specific casting requirements in the Equity piece relate to the "Gift of Time" production.

Kanin's desire to pay minimum salaries to all the performers in both shows, except the stars, is figured to be an attempt to compensate for the presumably hefty percentage deals being given the headliners.

Critics Ruled By Self-Interest

David Merrick Blasts Toronto's Three As Unworthily Motivated

Toronto, Jan. 23.

"Toronto has the three worst critics in North America and, if they keep it up, we can skip the two weeks in Toronto," David Merrick threatened. He was here to launch "Do Re Mi" on the first night of its tour.

(Incidentally, he received fairly good reviews on "Do Re Mi" out-of-town opening at the O'Keefe Center here—as did he on "Becket" and "Gypsy"—but suggested that he and other producers might boycott Toronto.)

"I would like to warn the citizens of Toronto that these gentlemen (the drama critics) are all bent on promoting their self-interest and advancing their careers," said Merrick. "All three are trying to get jobs in New York and I don't think they're good enough for Toronto, let alone New York.

"The terror of the theatre since the beginning of time has been the new critic. Such a one, trying to make a name, is smart-alecky and irresponsible. I like Toronto audiences and we do good business here but we have some pride; but why should we come here and take such a beating from these three with shows that drew raves everywhere else?"

(Three Toronto critics refused to attend a press conference here, even though Merrick offered to "send a cab." Only one turning up was Bob Blackburn, radio-tv columnist of the Toronto Telegram, with newspaper slapping a 5-column head on interview, plus a 2-col cut of Merrick.)

'Joshua Beene and God' Slated as B'way Entry; Fast's 'Crossing,' Dallas

Dallas, Jan. 23.

Paul Baker, director of the Dallas Theatre Centre, is considering a Broadway production next fall of "Joshua Beene and God," by Clifford Sage and Hal Lewis. The latter is managing editor of the Dallas Times Herald.

Plans call for touring the play in Chicago and other principal cities this spring. Burl Ives, star of the local production of the play, has the right of first refusal to recreate the role on Broadway and in any subsequent motion picture version.

"Joshua Beene and God" has been a smash hit during its run at the Dallas Theatre Centre. After working out budget requirements and clearing the project with the Securities Exchange Commission, Baker will offer shares in the production to Dallas residents.

Meanwhile, the Centre is readying the premiere of "The Crossing," by Howard Fast, with Edmon Ryan in the leading role, replacing Franchot Tone, who withdrew before the start of rehearsals. The play opens Feb. 13.

The theatre also plans to produce "The Rhinoceros" later this spring.

Oregon Bard Festival To Run July 21-Sept. 2

Ashland, Ore., Jan. 23.

The 22d annual Oregon Shakespearean Festival will run 44 consecutive nights, July 21 through Sept. 2, making it the longest season to date. Scheduled for the 1962 slate are "Comedy of Errors," "Henry IV, Part Two," "As You Like It" and "Coriolanus."

General manager William Patton has reported that the 42-night 1961 fest played to a new high in total attendance, 47,723, scaled to $3.20 top, against 42,976 last year. There were 29 sellouts.

Boxoffice income was $123,500 in 1961, and expenses were just over $108,000, both records.

Ballet Russe Seeks 50G Damages in Pact Suit Vs. Kenallen Enterprises

The management of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo is seeking $50,000 damages in a suit filed in N. Y. Supreme Court against Kenallen Enterprises Inc., for alleged breach of a contract negotiated Dec. 22, 1959. The complaint charges that Kenallen, in organizing a tour for the 1960-61 season, failed to secure contracts from local managers, with the result that the plaintiff was on several occasions confronted with gaps in its schedule and consequently obliged to operate at a disadvantage in arranging bookings and terms to fill the open dates.

It's alleged in the suit that due to unreasonable demands of the American Guild of Musical Artists, acting on behalf of the dancers in the company and with the permission of the defendants, the plaintiff had to cancel the first part of the 1960-61 season. The complaint also charges that at option time the ballet operation notified Kenallen that it would not extend its agreement unless a general plan was submitted of proposed bookings for the 1961-62 season. Such a plan, the plaintiff charges was never submitted.

The suit alleges that due to Kenallen's neglect, receipts for the 1960-61 semester were below expectations. Kenallen's president, the complaint continues, was absent from his office and the general manager of the Ballet Russe had to travel with the company. The defendant, it's alleged, was unable to arrange bookings for 1961 and the plaintiff therefore made agreements directly with local managers.

Kenallen, on the other hand, claims that it's owed $8,298.00 by Ballet Russe, plus 4% of the plaintiff's share of performance income.

Robert Bolt's "A Man for All Seasons" is to be published in book form by Random House.

Gloria Swanson's New One

Chicago, Jan. 23.

Gloria Swanson will star in a new comedy by Harold J. Kennedy, titled "The Inkwell," which will premiere as a pre-Broadway tryout at Drury Lane Theatre here. The play will begin a four week engagement on March 20.

Drury Lane producer Carl Stohn also signed Peggy Cass to appear in John Patrick's "Everybody Loves Opal," starting April 24, and has a commitment from Linda Darnell to do "Ten Little Indians" at a later date.

Plenty of Legit In M'pls-St. Paul

Minneapolis, Jan. 23.

This first 1962 month finds legit in the Twin Cities getting off to its liveliest beginning of any one year in a decade or more. Outstanding among the January activities are three touring productions, more than in any month in years.

"Taste of Honey" was at the St. Paul Auditorium last week while the Orpheum here had "A Thurber Carnival" last week and "Advise and Consent" currently. Also, construction has started on the Tyrone Guthrie Theatre, due to begin operation next spring with an Equity company offering a repertory policy.

The Old Log Theatre, a stock operation, opened its second season Jan. 11-14 with "Champagne Complex" and is currently presenting "Tunnel of Love." Don Stolz heads the group. Also the Edyth Bush Theatre, in existence many years as a repertory showhouse with recruited casts. It is run by the multi-millibnaire industrialist's wife for whom it's named. During the past year there has been a surge of little theatre groups, plus the Univ. of Minnesota Theatre, which also presents a summer season on its Mississippi River showboat. Dramatic groups in four other Twin Cities' colleges also offer plays from time to time.

Grosses in both Minneapolis and St. Paul have been hefty so far this season for touring shows playing the Twin Cities on Broadway Theatre Alliance and Theatre Guild-American Subscription Society subscription. In addition, without subscription, "The Music Man" played a return St. Paul engagement to a good take. The number of the subscription season offerings are six for each of the Twin Cities.

In Minneapolis the touring legit shows are playing at Ted Mann's 2,800-seat Orpheum between first run films. In St. Paul they play the 2,600-seat municipal Auditorium. The house here has some 5,000 season subscribers, and the St. Paul Auditorium has in excess of 4,000.

SET TROUPE, 3 PLAYS FOR CHICHESTER FEST

London, Jan. 23.

Legit focus this summer will be on Sussex, where the Chichester Festival Theatre opens July 5 with "The Chances," a 17th century comedy by John Fletcher. The play was last presented in London in 1808.

That will be followed by John Ford's tragedy, "The Broken Heart," and then a Constance Garnett translation of Chekov's "Uncle Vanya." The three plays will go into the company's repertory for the 10 weeks' season.

Laurence Olivier, the theatre's artistic director, will stage all three plays. He has picked 40 actors for the company, including Sybil Thorndike, Athene Seyler, Fey Compton, Lewis Casson, Michael Redgrave, Nicholas Hannen, Joan Greenwood, Joan Plowright (Mrs. Olivier), Kathleen Harrison, John Neville, Keith Michell and himself.

Sean Kenny and Roger Furse will be among the designers.

Carolina Playmakers Do Drama About Civil War

Chapel Hill, N.C., Jan. 23.

The Carolina Playmakers presented "Renegade," by Carl Hinrichs, last week at the Playmakers Theatre here.

The drama involves a young Confederate lieutenant who sees both sides in the Civil War as wrong.

'Fiorello,' 'Toys,' 'Miracle,' 'Best Man' Set to Wind Up Hinterland Tours

Closing dates have been set for the touring presentations of "Fiorello," "Toys in the Attic," "Miracle Worker" and "The Best Man" company, which has been touring the major cities.

Another touring entry "Gypsy" in which Mary McCarthy succeeded Mitzi Green as star, shuttered last Saturday night (20) at the Hanna Theatre, Cleveland.

"Fiorello" closes next Saturday (27) after a fortnight at the Erlanger Theatre, Philadelphia. "Best Man" shutters Feb. 3 at the Forrest Theatre, Philly, after a two-week stand there. "Toys" calls it quits Feb. 10 after a three-week booking at the Biltmore Theatre, Los Angeles. "Miracle" ends its tour March 31 in Providence, R.I.

The "Gypsy" presentation, which began a regular road trek last September following a nitery engagement at the Riviera, Las Vegas, was presented by Manny Davis, under lease from the original Broadway producers, David Merrick and Leland Hayward. The Davis production, which had been a twofer entry in most of the cities played, had run concurrently with the post-Broadway tour of the "Gypsy" company headed by Ethel Merman. The latter production closed last December.

The touring version of "Fiorello," presented by C. Edwin Knill and Martin Tahse, will have been on the road nearly 18 months by the time it closes in Philly. The original Broadway producers of the musical were Harold S. Prince and the late Robert E. Griffith. "Toys" was presented on Broadway last season, by Kermit Bloomgarden, who sent it on the road last September with Constance Bennett, Anne Revere, Scott McKay and Patricia Jessel costarred.

The Lillian Hellman play exited Chicago last week and opens tonight (Tues.) for a windup three-week stand at the Biltmore, Los Angeles. Miss Bennett's role has been taken over by Ann Shropshire for the L. A. stand.

"Best Man," originally produced on Broadway by Roger L. Stevens as a member of the Playwrights Co., was sent on the road by Stevens last September, costarring in the touring production of the Gore Vidal play are Frank Lovejoy, Kent Smith and James Westerfield. A bus-and-truck edition of the play is also touring.

"Miracle," produced on Broadway by Fred Coe, began touring last May in Chicago. The William Gibson play was produced for road presentation by Tahse.

'80 Days' Stage Version Based on Todd Film

Milwaukee, Jan. 23.

Mike Todd Jr. reported here that his projected stage version of "Around The World in 80 Days" will have its debut at the St. Louis Municipal Opera this coming June. Todd Jr. and Elizabeth Taylor, widow of Mike Sr., own the rights to the film version of "Around The World" which, Todd Jr. says, has grossed approximately $60,000,000. Original novel is, of course, in public domain. Orson Wells had his own stage version some years ago.

Todd's current films in development include "A Creature from The Bronx" and a takeoff on early Mask Sennett silent film comedies.

Charles Adams Offering 3-Way Production Plan For $75,000 Investment

Charles Adams, represented on Broadway during the 1956-57 season as co-producer of a revival of Bernard Shaw's "The Apple Cart," is now involved in a multi-pronged off-Broadway project. He has three plays earmarked for presentation outside the Times Square area on a combined capitalization of $75,000.

The properties are "The Elder Statesman," by T. S. Eliot; "The Boy David," by James M. Barrie, and "The Gift," which he co-authored with Norman King, the original scripter of the vehicle when it was presented in London in 1955 under the title, "The Shadow of Doubt." According to an offering circular to prosnective backers, Adams has the right to reduce the capitalization to a minimum of $25,000 with a proportionate increase in the net profits payable to the backers.

In the case of such a decrease in capitalization, Adams has the right to abandon the production of any of the plays. There's been no decision made as to the sequence in which the plays shall be produced or as to which would be done if any were abandoned.

Adams has the firstclass rights to the scripts and the right to present an off-Broadway production of each with a starting deadline of next Aug. 17 on "Statesman" and next Sept. 30 on "David" and "Gift." His present plans call for the production off-Broadway of each of the vehicles independently of the other so that one, two or all of the plays may be running at any given time.

Besides sharing equally with the backers in any profits on the project, Adams is also to receive one-third of the authors' take on "Gift." He also has the right to direct all or any of the plays and to receive "reasonable compensation for such services." The maximum royalty to be paid the authors of the works involved is 6% on each play.

Oscar Lewenstein Gets London's Theatre Royal

London, Jan. 23.

Efforts are still being made to work out a permanent operating setup for the Theatre Royal, Stratfort, East London. West End producer Oscar Lewenstein has leased the house for an indefinite period, and wants Joan Littlewood, who founded Theatre Workshop there, to return to stage shows for him. Lewenstein sees the theatre as a venue for trying out new plays.

The Theatre Royal's spring schedule so far includes productions of "The Secret Of The World," by Ted Allen, with Miriam Karlin; "The Scatterin'," by James McKenna; and "All Things Bright And Beautiful," by Keith Waterhouse and Willis Hall.

Prior to Lewenstein's operation, Broadway producer and former actor-singer Peter Cookson has leased the house for a month, and will present a rival of "On a Clear Day," opening Jan. 31.

Esoteric Items for Rome: Osaka, Gelber, Greeks, Billetdoux and Wilde

Rome, Jan. 23.

"Theatre Club" whose membership is about 300 sophisticates, interested in "first" or "for members only" events, has broadened its repertoire this year, offering the Puppet Theatre from Osaka a Japanase entertainment of marionettes, masques and puppets followed by Paris' latest sensation "Va donc chez Thorpe" a play by Francois Billetdoux as well as Jack Gelber's first European presentation of "The Apple.

Michael Mac Liammoir will do his "Importance of Being Oscar," the Greek National Theatre will present either Sophocles or Euripides and Racine's "Andromaque" will be presented by the French company of F. Maistre.

Ex-Tarheel Stude Gives $1,500 for Drama Guests

Chapel Hill, N.C., Jan. 23.

An anonymous donor, once a student in the Univ. of North Carolina drama department, is giving $1,500 a year to bring nationally-prominent theatre figures to the campus.

Harry Davis, chairman of the drama department, says the visitor will remain in Chapel Hill about a week, conducting seminars on playwriting and production, and perhaps making an address.

Young Actors: The Mixture as Before

A Wow in Miami, Beginner Finds Manhattan Odds High—Greatest Character Trait Needed Is Patience

By CRANE JACKSON

Nobody knows how many actors move into Manhattan every season to crash the theatre. I speak as one who did, earning my due share of surprises, and perhaps bringing my own brand of naive expectations. No doubt my original lack of sophistication was in supposing myself quite sophisticated because I had been a wow on local (Miami) radio and television and had a press book listing 150 plays. The point was that my experience was local and the stage work was in little theatres.

Point one: it's a cinch for a person in these circumstances to exaggerate his qualifications for New York and Broadway. I did.

Point two: what you need, in more supply than most young hopefuls have, is an abundance of patience. Like the army, show biz for the unestablished talent is hurry up and wait.

Point three: you just gotta harden yourself to the lack of courtesy, common humanity in a business that is bored with ambitious beginners, because nothing is so commonplace and so repetitious.

I suppose the young actor in New York has a lot of high walls facing him. I'm told it was always true. I won't argue. As one of those waiting to get through the gates to the gardens, I'm naturally keenly aware of the "horrors" of indifference and the hazards of being or not being at the right place at the right time.

Even so I can't shake the impression that the situation has worsened for the newcomer. Take the evaporation of the job possibilities of radio drama. Gone are the 35 and more daytime serials of yesteryear. Gone, too, are the television productions now on film or tape but, more to the point, made in Hollywood.

With the demise of television originations and major pictures on the coast, the actor today must have more determination to make it than he ever needed before. The gruffness and discourtesy which were habitual in producers' offices is transferred to the agents, the middle-men faced with too few jobs for the actors already registered.

From what I gather from fellow actors working on the West Coast, less and less of the "new faces" are being used in series shows with, of course, a few exceptions. "Perry Mason" which began with little known actors is now hiring name performers for even the smallest supporting roles. Other shows have followed suit. What price neophyte?

Recently I was one of the winners in a talent search contest conducted by Warner Brothers. True, I won a prize. But it certainly didn't match the 10-week contract offered the first prize winner. Had there been a real need for "new faces" (for all the lip service) something would've happened to the rest of us who came in the money.

It's pretty paradoxical to us aspirants to keep hearing about the need for "new faces." This has always been Broadway and Hollywood's cry, but "new faces" aren't the drawing card wanted. Take Dick Davalos who was introduced in "East of Eden" with James Dean. Davolos, I understand, had nothing to follow up this great showcase and so was unemployed for a while garnering whatever work he could muster in Hollywood and New York. An ill-fated video series, "The Americans," was his last big break, but alas, it's back to the same grind. Alvy Moore who played a lead role in "Susan Slept Here" and played the part in high style was last seen in a small part in "Wackiest Ship In the Army." It's a shame on both counts.

Another thing you find out is that the only help you really get is the help and opportunity you make for yourself. A director once claimed that he didn't deserve the credit for establishing or "helping" any young actor get a break, because he only hired that actor because he needed him. In his radio heyday Eddie Cantor gave a lot of opportunities to young performers, but they helped boost his ratings as well. This is not to take it away from any of these people who provided the coveted break. Rare indeed is there the case of a Lauren Bacall who pushed Kirk Douglas into the limelight because they had been friends at the American Academy. Perhaps it's the insecurity of the business, I don't know. In my own case, I've worked with many performers who became fast friends when we were on the bottom together, one notably is a teenage favorite who has garnered much publicity and promotion. He's on his way down from the top spot he once held, but when he was riding high there he manifested no desire to help old colleagues, or perhaps he couldn't.

One thing a young actor like myself, who luckily has kept alive by doing industrial films (30 of them), summer stock (six seasons) and bits and pieces in locally made (N. Y.) features and television shows, should keep in mind is what those on top have said. I read everything a well-known performer has said on interviews or in biographies. I'm stimulated by their encouragement. One statement, made by Anthony Quinn, has really helped me. When I noticed my friends getting the "breaks" and me, neither going up or down, but going sideways, I recall Quinn saying, "Don't compete with other actors. Compete with yourself."

I repeat, the young actor must have patience. He must wait for that one, important chance. I believe it will come for me. Patience is what it takes. And a little money to pay the rent.

HILLARD ELKINS AS MUSICAL PRODUCER

Personal manager Hillard Elkins plans making his Broadway managerial debut next season as producer of a musical version of "The Three Musketeers." The writers haven't been set yet.

Elkins, who's also involved in television production, left New York for the Coast yesterday (Tues.) for the filming of a pilot of an "African Queen" tv series, to be produced by him, John Ireland and Hugh French in partnership with Four Star Productions. He's due back in Manhattan next Sunday (28) for a meeting with his client, Steve McQueen, who's completed his costarring assignment in Columbia's "The War Lover," filmed in England.

On Feb. 5, Elkins will be in Philadelphia for the pre-Broadway opening at the Erlanger Theatre there of "All American," the musical version of Robert Lewis Taylor's "Professor Fodorsky." The book for "All American" was adapted by Mel Brooks and the music and lyrics were written, respectively, by Charles Strouse and Lee Adams. The three writers are represented by Elkins.

National Opera Troupes 'Martha,' in English Text

Raleigh, N.C., Jan. 23.

"Martha," by von Flotow, is being performed by the National Opera Co. in North Carolina cities and then the tour will move to other states. A Raleigh performance on Jan. 5 marked the opening of this season's Grass Roots Opera Guild series.

Libretto is credited to Vicki Baum and Ann Ronell (Mrs. Lester Cowan). It was revived last season at the Metropolitan Opera in Manhattan.

A Chicago soprano, Shirley Yount sings the title role.

Life Members of AETA

Durham, N. C., Jan. 23.

Joseph C. Wetherby and his wife, Carol, have been given life memberships in the American Educational Theatre Assn. in recognition of their contributions to the theatrical and allied fields.

Wetherby is a member of the English Dept. of Duke Univ. and his wife has taught public speaking there.

AIM TOURING COMPANY OF 'TAKE' THIS SPRING

Harold S. Prince, producer of "Take Her, She's Mine," now in its fifth week on Broadway, has lost no time in lining up a tour for a road edition of the comedy next season. The producer, apparently figuring on a lengthy Main Stem run for the Phoebe and Henry Ephron comedy, intends casting a touring company this spring for a Sept. 6 opening at the Auditorium, Rochester.

The road trek is slated to cover 26 key cities in an 11-month period, ending Aug. 3 of next year in Hollywood. Art Carney and Phyllis Thaxter costar in the original production at the Biltmore Theatre, N. Y.

La Pensee

He offers it as a sort of experimental story, but then beats the victim to death with a paperweight before her eyes.

The second part tends to be repetitious, and has too much embroidering on the theme of madness. But Terzieff's acting and personality gives it force. The actor has also provided clear staging that also helps keep the ideas dramatic and progressive, glossing over the fairly shallow characterizations.

The sets are simple and functional, the costumes are good and the cast an asset, especially R. J. Chauffard's knowing psychiatrist and Yvette Etievant's sympathetic nurse. Mosk.

Barbasuk

Zurich, Dec. 9.

Stadttheatre production of operetta in seven scenes by Kurt Nachmann and Kurt Wilhelm, based on a Jules Romains comedy, with lyrics by Paul Burkhard and Max Rueger and music by Burkhard. Staged by Kurt Wilhelm; conductor, Victor Reinshagen; sets, Fritz Butz; choreography, Michel de Lutry; chorus director, Emil Baechtold; technical director, Willy Loeffel; lighting, Jakob Schlosstein. Opened Dec. 3, '61, at Stadttheatre Zurich; $3.50 top.

King Yussuf, Barbasuk ..... Peter Schuette
Hasibar ..... Adele Leigh
Juliette ..... Elsbeth von Luedinghausen
Princess Faime ..... Hedda Heusser
Ibrahim ..... Dorian Huber
Prime Minister Muley ..... Reinhold Guether
Col. Murad ..... Hans-Joachim Frick
Almansor ..... Ralph Telasko
Kaleb ..... Alfred Strasser
Ali ..... Fritz Peter
Assassin ..... Gottlieb Zeithammer
Fasim ..... Vincenzo Giagi
Miss Pentagony ..... Ryta Keller

The latest work by Swiss composer Paul Burkhard, whose "Firework" (which included the hit song, "Oh My Papa") became a substantial b.o. success in Europe, is a curious mixture of traditional operetta and modern musicomedy. It comes across as neither one thing nor the other.

The show was considerably overlong at the opening, but has been cut at least 40 minutes since then. But even in its tightened version, it is a questionable boxoffice bet and a doubtful contender for international acceptance. The principal flaws include a formless and dry-as-dust book with only occasional bright spots, a generally uninspired score, plus unimaginative and often static staging by German tv director Kurt Wilhelm, who also collaborated on the book.

The story is one of those dual identity fictions about a Middle East country where Russia and the western countries are vying for newly discovered oil. The plot twist involves the king and his look-alike aviator half - brother. Both roles are brilliantly played by legit actor Peter Schuette. Imaginative writing might have turned this into a fairly satisfactory musical comedy, but there are too many lapses into pure hokum, coupled with flat dialog and, at first hearing, not a single standout musical number. Some of the tunes are easy on the ear, repetitious and not of hit potential.

A visually delightful production and a talented cast seem wasted on this thin material. Sets by Fritz Butz are decorative and tasteful. British stage and tv star Adele Leigh impresses vocally and visually as a harem beauty, and other parts are excellently bandled by Elsbeth von Luedinghausen, Hedda Heusser and Ralph Telasko. The choreography by Michel de Lutry is negligible in its present form, but many ballet numbers have been subject to post-opening cutting. Mezo.

Poppa Is Home

wed pregnancy are rampant. What can poor sick Poppa do? He can rise from his wheelchair, walk and talk, flay about him, and at the end of the play, when he finds his efforts have been fruitless, he can drop dead.

It's always a revelation how some actors can rise above their material while others become hopelessly mired. As a hopeful Southern belle, married to the ailing patriarch's impotent grandson, Esther Benson has humor, style and flair. Linda Marsh, as the trim granddaughter who's just a tiny bit pregnant, reveals spirit, while Adelaide Klein, as a senior boarder, gets humor mileage out of woman's innate nosiness.

As the ailing old man who almost plays Lazarus, Theo Goetz progresses from silent eyebrow twitching to stern rage to saccharine kindliness.

Robert T. Seymour has staged, and what his attitude might be toward Schneler's play remains unclear. Geor.

All Kinds of Giants

Noel Weiss presentation of musical comedy in three acts, with book and lyrics by Tom Whedon, music by Sam Pottle. Staged by Peter Conlow; costumes and scenery, Merrill Sindler; lighting, Pat Simmons; musical direction, Milton Seltzer; musical arrangement, Gordon Emerson. Opened Dec. 18, '61, at the Cricket Theatre, N.Y.; $3.90 top weeknights, $4.90 weekends.

Cast: Ralph Purdum, Claiborne Cary, Richard Morse, Tom Rummler, Bill Hinnant.

"All Kinds of Giants" is a tiny musical, performed on a tiny stage by a tiny cast. It's only a tiny bit amusing.

The plot, such as it is, concerns the love of a tailor for a princess, and the insistence of the king that his daughter marry a prince.

The happy ending is provided by a giant who has been terrorizing the kingdom and driving tourists away. Played delightfully by pint-sized Bill Hinnant, he's tired of frightening people by means of a megaphone-enlarged voice, he is more than willing to help the tailor win the princess.

Although it is sometimes charming and never tasteless, the show is defeated by its own lack of ambition. Everything about it is small and whimsical, rather than distinctive or original.

Sam Pottle's music is sometimes pleasant, but not memorable. Tom Whedon's book and lyrics are too often prone to lines that produce cringes rather than laughs.

Claiborne Cary, as the princess, is petite and attractive, and her singing is good. But Richard Morse as the tailor, Tom Rummler as the prince, and Ralph Purdom as the king, do little to alleviate the boredom, although they are all personable. Bill Hinnant, as the giant, would seem to bear watching.

Merrill Sindler's sets are inventive, but bulky. Peter Conlow's staging is good, but doesn't overcome the tedious good-cheer of the material. Kenn.

Fortuna

Sam Cohn & John Wulp presentation of musical in two acts, with book and lyrics by Arnold Weinstein, music by Francis Thorne, adapted from the comedy, "Fortuna" con 'F' Maiuscula," by Eduardo de Filippo and Armando Curcio. Staged by Glen Tetley; music direction, Jack Lee; orchestration, Julian Stein; arrangements, Stein and Lee; setting and lighting, William Ritman; costumes, Willa Kim; associate producer, Julia Miles. Opened Jan. 3, '62, at the Maidman Playhouse, N.Y.; $4.20 top weekdays, $4.90 Fridays and Saturdays.

Cast: Gabriel Dell, Jane Connell, Blaire Stauffer, Honey Sanders, Benjamin Hayeem, Ed Powell, Ted Beniades, Pat Birch, Morrie Pierce, Jake Dengel, Harry Singleton, Gene Massimo, Jerry deLuise, Morrie Pierce.

The first five minutes of "Fortuna," at the Maidman, are promising. The principals, an impoverished Italian con man, and his wife and son, are introduced in a stylized dance that shows them waking, dressing, and preparing to meet a new day. The cut-away set of a Neapolitan tenement is effective, and the tinkly music complements their movements.

From there on, it's all downhill. A confused combination of tuneless music, unimaginative lyrics and very bad puns, "Fortuna" is like a college sophomore's idea of experimental theatre.

Included are a corny comic doctor, a Marx Brothers routine in which a temporarily dumb boy tries to tell his father an important message, and the old burlesque-vaudeville bit about the character who takes off one coat after another after another. None of these is done particularly well.

Most of the actors seem as bored as the audience. Only Jane Connell, in the small role of Fortuna's wife, brings style and impish humor to the witless lines. Gabriel Dell, in the title role, tries so hard that he defects himself. The others in the cast are either amateurish or completely overthrown by the obstacles the authors have placed in their paths. Ster.

The Story of Mary Surratt

Equity Library Theatre, Inc. revival of a three-act drama by John Patrick. Staged by Herbert Nielsen; settings, David Houston; lighting, Kay Woodman; music and arrangements, Al Gorgoni. Opened Dec. 9, '61, at the Master Theatre, N.Y.; admission by contribution.

Cast: Julie Sommars, Kate Wilkinson, Peter Blaxill, George Vlachos, Gerard Russak, Frank Smith, John Hillerman, Barry Snider, Donald Perkins, Christopher Adams, Mel Haynes, Mark Weston, Don Buchwald, Jay Barney, Carl Shelton, Calvin Ander, Brooks Rogers, Rolla Nuckles, Boyd Miller, Bill Splawn, Charles Hull, Mervyn Haines, Robert Bernard, Bill Betancourt, Richard Stretchberry, Emil Mach, Jim Manning, Mario Galasso, Christopher Lofting, Frank Birney.

Although portions of Equity Library Theatre's revival of "The Story of Mary Surratt" are engrossing, the production is generally lengthy and cumbersome. Much conviction and warm regard seem to have gone into this revival of John Patrick's examination of a possible miscarriage of justice, but love's labor's lost when the going gets heavy.

The ELT-ers have tended to lay on the passions with melodramatic fervor, whereas a more temperate rendering might make a stronger case. A tract is seldom as convincing as reasoned reporting.

As the presumably blameless woman of the title, Kate Wilkinson credibly makes the transition from innocence to bewilderment to desperation. As the Senator who tries to save her, Jay Barney has mature force and fervently delivers the play's closing moral platitudes.

John Hillerman is appropriately evasive as the ignoble son who flees, Julie Sommars has quaint charm as the obviously loyal daughter, and Barry Snider has convincing swagger as the actor assassin. As a fearless Irish priest, Robert Bernard gives a performance that sizzles with understanding of human foibles.

Herbert Nielsen's staging has sympathetic comprehension but he has tolerated a dilatory pace that kills effects even as they are created. Huge pauses and silences abound, and Carl Shelton, as senior officer of the court martial that convicts the woman, seems to have been allowed a pause a word.

Davis Houston has designed another of the fine settings that seem to be the hallmark of ELT productions this season. Geor.

'Malicious' Capsule Pans

play, to repeat it at regular intervals, even if he continued to hold that view.

Tolerant on Orders

The Observer explained that the column was not committed simply to repeating the judgments of its chief drama critic, Kenneth Tynan. The writer (not always the same man) was explicitly enjoined to be catholic in his tastes, and was expected to express his own view with the object of offering helpful advice to potential theatregoers.

The dispute proper stems from the publication last November of a comment on "My Fair Lady," referring to "the pitiful relic of a great musical." Shortly afterward, H. M. Tennent withdrew its advertising for all the five theatres it controls.

In December, the "Fair Lady" comment referred to a "great musical now in a state of sad decline." Following that, nearly all members of the Society cancelled their advertising and now all have withdrawn.

According to the Observer, the effect of this cancellation is to deprive readers of information about what is available in the London theatre. Therefore, it has been decided to publish the theatre guide weekly instead of monthly, together with details of times of performances, telephone numbers of theatres, etc. In the first of these weekly guides "Fair Lady" was called a "pale shadow of a once great show."

"Fair Comment" in New York

There have been mild mutterings among Broadway managements from time to time for many years because of similar recurring critical references in several New York publications, notably the New Yorker. In general, however, attitude has been that such editorializing is fair comment.

There have reputedly been plaintive feelers from managements on occasion, and depending on the approach and the mood of the editors, a few unfavorable capsule opinions have probably been softened slightly. On the whole, however, producers, authors and others concerned have apparently figured that, except for the remote possibility of libel action, nothing could be done to halt the practice.

Remember Benchley?

In some instances, such as the late Robert Benchley's weekly variations of gag raps at the long-running "Abie's Irish Rose," there was some speculation that the regular editorial references may have actually helped promote the show. In any case, managements generally reason that they'd rather have the added publicity, including the occasional pan, than get no such free mention at all.

There have been sporadic attempts, in fact, to persuade the New York dailies to print some sort of editorial listing of legit shows. The only thing of the sort are the alphabetical show ads, the so-called ABC ads, for which amusement rates (the highest) are charged. Newspaper managements have always refused to publish free listings for legit, although some do so for films and all give extensive free space to television and radio program schedules.

But far from objecting to free listings in the few magazines that publish such features, New York producers welcome them. And since they rejoice over favorable comments, they can hardly squawk too hard at the occasional pans.

Bill Hoffman

supervisory system established at CBS by Doug Coulter, many of the dramatic shows were assigned to staff editors who became their producers, with authority over the studio directors. That the latter hated this system will require no elaboration. It followed that Hoffman, as with the other producer-editors, had to fight for his point of view. This he did with a fine fervor, eloquence and dependable loyalty to his immediate superior. After the Radio Writers Guild (that was) got two of the four staff editors under its jurisdiction, Hoffman and Monroe became the management team with Landry.

Although Hoffman's first Broadway play, "Affair or Honor" with Dennis King was not a hit it resulted in a happy contract for a film sale to Gregory Peck under which Hoffman received $12,500 each Jan. 15 for the next six years.

One manuscript of Hoffman's authorship attracted much respect among Broadwayites but has never been optioned owing to a producer fear that the prototype was a too-readily-guessed famous dramatist. Meanwhile in recent years Hoffman's attention veered from the air media to the stage. He was active in various play-promoting cooperatives, a persistent first-nighter and Times Square familiar.

As he scratched his formal name, played down his thespic experiences, Bill Hoffman would certainly have denied that he ran a "theatrical salon", but it was surely that on occasion. It was only evidence of his zest for things that became an amateur cook, specializing in the exotic.

The Hoffmans two children, in their early teens, are Toni Phillipe and Darnay.

tour of 120 cities, starting Sept. 24 in Hershey, Pa., is being set up for the Guettel production. The present touring company of "Sound," in which Florence Henderson stars, will probably continue to play prime time next season.

"The Tenth Man" tour being set by Olney will involve the present road production of the Paddy Chayefsky play, sent out by the show's Broadway producers, Saint Subber and Arthur Cantor. This season's tour covers the major cities. Leland Hayward will produce the road edition of his Broadway presentation of "Shot" for the Olney-managed tour. Hayward is also considering assembling another company of the Harry Kurnitz adaptation of Marcel Achard's comedy for a road bow next spring.

Besides managing Dorian Attractions, Olney is also manager of the tour division of United Performing Arts Inc., which last season acquired the network of Broadway Theatre League subscription cities from Columbia Artists Management Inc. The shows booked by Dorian Attractions are handled independently of UPA, but are made available to the operation's BTL setup. In addition to the tours he's arranging for Dorian Attractions, Olney is also negotiating for other shows to be booked specifically for the UPA subscription cities.

The shows being handled by Olney will constitute only a portion of the product available for the road next season. The Independent Booking Office, which organizes the major city tours, is also expected to be busy with numerous new entries.

Hotel Musicals

cause they have a large store of sets and costumes in Sacramento, where they've staged 110 musicals in 10 seasons at their Music Circus. They do one musical a week in the summer, and grossed $280,000 in their 1961 season.

For the Sheraton-Palace, the producers say they're insisting on quality shows and also want to retain "gracious" seating, with no crowding. If there proves to be extra room, they'll run in a few more seats. For "Guys and Dolls" they've hired Lloyd Bridges, Pamela Britten and Lou Nova. Sandy Matlovesky will be the permanent conductor of their nine-piece orchestra.

The plan is to start dinner at 6:30 p.m., have it over by 8:30 p.m. and start the overture at 8:45 p.m., allowing ample time for service of drinks. A portable stage has been built and the hotel has built new rehearsal and dressing rooms in space vacated by another tenant, KCBS. Each show will be uncut and will run a minimum of three weeks.

Other musicals under discussion for the winter and spring include "Take Me Along," with Wiliam Bendix; "Can Can," with Gisele MacKenzie; "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" and "Flower Drum Song." The $7.75 minimum will apply Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Sundays (when show will start an hour earlier), while the Friday-Saturday minimum will be $8.50.

Theatre Design Exhibit

A touring exhibition of designs for new theatres, prepared by the American Federation of Arts under a grant from the Ford Foundation, will be offered Saturday (27) through March 4 at the Museum of Contemporary Crafts, N. Y.

The exhibition, titled "The Ideal Theatre: Eight Concepts," will then tour 14 other cities over a two-year period.

German Lent Jitters

of Berlin, many of the cities toned down their Fasching start when the prince and princess of the lengthy celebrating are chosen.

Now it has just been announced that one major Fasching ball, traditionally held in Berlin in February, will be cancelled because this is no time for fun-making in the troubled city. Elsewhere in West Germany it has been decided to softpedal the Fasching fun because of the world crisis that revolves around Berlin.

And three Essen, West Germany, church groups have just put the final kibosh on living-it-up in their area. The superintendents of the three church areas jointly announced that the carnival in Essen (one of West Germany's richest cities, the home of the iron and coal barons) actually has no genuine Rhineland tradition. And instead of being a time of harmless merrymaking, it's a time of drunkenness and immorality that often results in broken marriages and personal disasters.

They have advised the churchgoers not to participate in the frivolity, particularly in view of the East-West conflict.

So it looks as if the carnival will have a hard time living up to its former wild carefree exhilarating spirit, in view of the current criticisms. And for the nightclub and restaurant and hotel owners, the prospect of the slowdown on business is a dim one.

Scott-Mann

Scott says the company is looking for a suitable story for a picture to be made in Detroit.

The tv contract calls for a $50,000 advance, which already has been deposited in Scott's account. ZIV will pay the actor-producer $10,000 a week for 32 weeks in 1963, $11,000 a week for 28 weeks in 1964 and $12,000 a week for 24 weeks in 1965. The arrangement is presumably subject to options.

Following the company's first legit production, a second one is being readied for a March or April curtain. It will be "Great Day in the Morning," starring Scott's wife, Colleen Dewhurst.

In regard to his interest in a film vehicle, Scott says, "We will begin planning the production as soon as we can find a property. We expect that production could start this spring." He explains that he prefers a novel or story with a Michigan locale or involving Michigan people.

"The picture," Scott adds, "would probably have a budget of $600,000 to $700,000." He indicates that the money may be sought from outside sources, but that Theatre-of-Michigan would control details of the production.

W. Germans' Wild Display of Wealth Touches Off Bonanza for Show Biz

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, Jan. 30.

All this lovely loot is going to the West Germans' heads. And the new trend here is, "Be as rich as you can, and make sure the neighbors know about it."

So, a new "Millionaires' Night Club" has just opened in Munich which restricts its membership to 99 millionaires. In Duesseldorf, a new restaurant-nightclub has also opened, featuring—touch 'em—genuine sable seats. The snob set turned out in full force at a $12.50-a-head Fasching Ball, and plenty were forced to pay double that for black market tickets. And a new television show is titled, "Germany, Your Millionaires."

It's great for the entertainment business!

And not only that. This poor writer just attended a theatre party given by one of Frankfurt's fabulous set, where the guest on her

Zanuck Calls All D-Day Film 'Fake'

Paris, Jan. 30.

Television documentaries purporting to show the Allied invasion of Normandy on June 6, 1944, are using fake material which was shot a day or two after the actual assault, film producer Darryl F. Zanuck flatly asserted here. Of his own upcoming picture, "The Longest Day," he stated he'd incorporate no stock shots in his production. "I have no intention of cheating the public," he stated.

"I will not use library footage claiming to be D-Day combat coverage because no such films exist. For most of June 6, there were no cameras on the beaches. Later on D-Day, Robert Capa got ashore and took some memorable shots. But no film camera covered the assault. I have had three editors go through all available material with a fine tooth comb and they found nothing of an authentic nature."

Elsa Martinelli Can't See Italian Actresses For Their Big Bosoms

Tokyo, Jan. 30.

It now takes more than a formidable bosom for an Italian actress to become a success, according to tall and slender Elsa Martinelli here on her way to Hong Kong with her husband on their Far East vacation. Miss Martinelli mentioned with pride that she has outlasted almost all of the Italian actresses who were given film contracts on mammary merits. But in the early stages of her career, par-

BILL WOULD AID ARTS VIA ROYALTIES FUND

Washington, Jan. 30.

A bill introduced by Rep. Harris B. McDowell (D.-Del.) would let the Government collect royalties on all writings, including music, in the public domain and use the money "to advance education in the fine arts."

Public domain music royalties alone would amount to about $6,520,000 annually, according to Secretary of Labor Arthur Goldberg.

LOTSA COIN IN THEMES, JINGLES

By EDDIE KALISH

Although television has a bad name with conductors and arrangers for importing from Europe canned music for its "moods" and "bridges," the medium is proving a rich revenue-producer for writers of theme songs and commercial jingles and of performance money for publishers.

A quick look around the dials reveals that there are many composers, lyricists, publishers and others who have been able to reap financial rewards via the

CBS' Moscow Man Covers Canaveral, Reflects On 'Open Society' vs Pravda

By MARVIN KALB
(CBS Moscow correspondent)

Cape Canaveral, Jan. 30.

For the American reporter, based in Moscow, the differences between a Cape Canaveral launching and a Baikonur launching are staggering. One is conducted in the open; the other in secrecy. One is observed by over 1,000 reporters, representing the Hindustan Times as well as the New York Times (not to mention the tens of millions who see it actually happen on television); the other by a fistful of trusted Soviet reporters, who would not breathe a word about the preparations for a Titov flight even to their mothers. One is televised and broadcast live; the other is shown in carefully selected film excerpts—sometimes as late as a month after the launching.

In short, one—here at the Cape—is the open product of an open

DEAD, LUCKY LUCIANO LOOKS SURE FOR FILMING

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

No sooner had the news flashed that Charles (Lucky) Luciano died in Italy when indie producer Al Zimbalist registered title "Lucky Luciano." He lost no time signing scripter Irving Shulman, who did Zimbalist's "Baby Face Nelson" to turn out a screenplay.

Luciano was reportedly about to confer on an "authorized" biopic with Martin Gosch at time of his heart attack.

Automation Cure: More Radiance

A new book by Dora Albert, "How To Cash In On Your Abilities" (Prentice-Hall, $4.95), borrows extensively from the wisdom of film studio dramatic coach Helena Sorell and program packager John Guedel. Book is pegged to those skills of personality supposedly still paying off in a world where automation threatens millions of jobs.

Public speaking, power-memory, writing ability, inter-personal adjustment are the big things, while looking for a job in tomorrow's job-scarce economy. The cheery side amidst the gloom!

Show Biz Unions, Trade Assns. Fire New Protest Vs. JFK Fun Crackdown

Earlier Bedtime Finally Decreed In Traditionally Stay-Up Madrid

Madrid, Jan. 30.

With a stroke of his pen, the Minister of interior has committed Spaniards "to enjoy, enjoy" a lot earlier than they have in over a decade. Effective the night of Feb. 8, Spanish motion picture houses will close their doors at midnight (instead of 1 a.m.), theatres a quarter of an hour later, while circuses and Jai Alai halls must shut down at 12:30. Everything else (except night clubs)—restaurants, cafeterias, cafes and bars, will be locked tight at 1:30 a.m. An extra half hour leeway right down the line has been authorized during the summer months from June through Sept.

The police ministry of Spain, rector of hours and morals, spent the last nine months listening to dissuasive arguments from entertainment and eatery sindicatos but reached the conclusion that the new rise and shine working hours decreed last April deserved a companion schedule for earlier entertainment and diversion.

It is expected that motion picture programming will be drastically reshuffled. The current 7 and 11 p.m. film performances will go out the window to meet the midnite deadline. On the other hand, government order will eliminate sub-human legit conditions for actors who now grind out 13 (often 14) performances a week under the present two-a-night arrangement. It is a foregone conclusion in theatrical circles that the new law will bring a single nightly performance with matinees scheduled along occidental lines.

What will happen to the Spanish late dinner habit is anyone's guess. Chances are the 10 p.m. (or later) couvert will survive at the expense of filmgoing and legit to become a form of entertainment per se. In any event, the early-to-rise work schedule implanted by the government last April has finally and decisively been implemented with an early-to-bed timetable for entertainment.

Astaire Dance Studio Op In Mpls. Beats Swindling Rap When Witness Balks

Minneapolis, Jan. 30.

Judge E. J. Lyons in District Court last week dismissed swindling charges against Thereon (Terry) Darling, 38, who conducted the Fred Astaire Dance Studio here and went into bankruptcy last June. The reason for the court's action was that the state's chief witness, 61-year old Edna Lindstrom, turned hostile in her testimony.

Miss Lindstrom originally informed authorities in a letter signed by her that she only received 600 of 1,000 hours of dance

F-M ENCORE FOR RABBI

Reported Threats Silenced As Press Takes Interest

Boston, Jan. 30.

WUPY, Lynn is repeating Rabbi Elmer Berger of the American Council for Judaism as the central figure of a panel broadcast Feb. 4. Thus the owner of the frequency modulation station, Harvey Sheldon, who will moderate, is ignoring pressures of Zionist spokesman who previously objected to Berger because he speaks for the non-Zionist Jews of America.

Threats made verbally by the more rabid partisans apparently evaporated when Boston newspapers got on their trail.

MILAN'S 'ATLANTIDA' IN JUNE DRAWING SCOUTS

Barcelona, Jan. 23.

Posthumous opera, "Atlantida," by Manuel de Falla will be mounted at La Scala in Milan next June with Thomas Schippers of U. S. conducting. Margherita Wallman who will do the staging is negotiating with George London of the Met Opera for the lead. Work was presented in concert version here at the Liceo recently with Victoria de los Angeles and Raimundo Torres.

Incomplete at the death of the composer, "Atlantida" was scored by his pupil Ernesto Halffter.

There is some evidence of festival interest in the concert version. Granada, Santander, Madrid and Bruselles have manifest some receptivity.

Milan production is expected to draw an international delegation of opera house scouts.

50 Road Performances For Met Sans Toronto

Metropolitan Opera's spring tour for 1962, with Toronto a casualty, will amount to six and a half weeks. There will be 50 road performances divided among the following works: "Lucia di Lammermoor" (8); "La Forza del Destino" (7); "Tosca" (7); "Butterfly" (6); "Girl of the Golden West" (6); "Aida" (5); "Cosi Fan Tutte" (5); "Salome" (5); "La Boheme" (1). (Note: no "Carmen")

Company will hit Boston for an eight-opera week, April 9-15, then return to Manhattan for Met's final week. Tour resumes in Cleveland, April 23-29. Seven operas then in Atlanta, April 30-May 5. A single performance May 7 in Memphis breaks the jump to Dallas, for seven, May 8-13.

Francis Robinson is again in charge of the spring tour which travels in about 20 baggage and 17 sleeping cars.

Indie Label Puts Facts Of Life in Groove For Moppets Via Sex LP

Here's something for the kiddies. Washington Records, the children's line of Bill Grauer Productions, has a new LP entitled "A Child's Introduction to Sex." Written by Dr. Milton I. Levine and enacted by him and actress Melba Rae, the platter is designed for children over the age of five to answer their questions concerning birth and reproduction.

Dr. Levine is Associate Prof. of Clinical Pediatrics at the New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center and consultant to the New York City Health Dept. He is considered an authority on sex education. His purpose in preparing the disk is that he feels that modern parents realize the importance of sex education and want to answer their children's questions properly but often lack the knowledge or vocabulary to do so satisfactorily.

He has designed the disk to answer "with clarity and dignity" the story of how life begins with scientific accuracy, avoiding sentimentality.

What Carrying 'Variety' Did For My Prestige

Clifton, N.J.

Editor, VARIETY:

I wish to express my gratitude to you and your organization for the Publication of your 56th Anniversary issue. The choice of cover color, the thickness, and the weight were exactly right.

For almost a year I have been trying to impress a pretty young blonde at my bus stop, with the fact that I am an aspiring young actor and worthy of knowing, by carting a copy of "Variety" around in my hip pocket (face out) to no avail. The Anni issue fortunately was too large to fit in a pocket, so I was forced to carry it under my arm. Much to my surprise the amount of attention I received greatly improved.

At last, I said to mystelf, this is the answer. If I carry it around in my pocket I'm a bum, if I carry it under arm I'm a success.

At last, I said to myself, this was focused on me, a glance here, a smile there and even an occasional, haven't-I-seen-you-on-tv look.

Finally the pretty young thing left her companion and edged her way through the crowd to where I was standing. "Hello" she said, giving out with her Sunday best smile.

"Do you mind if I ask you a very personal question?" "Shoot," I said, while my mind wandered over the wonderful possibilities, (haven't I seen you in the movies, you look like so and so, are you?)

She toyed with her presentation, stammered a little on the first word "Why," and then burst forth with, "Why are you carrying a telephone book?"

BALANCE OF SKED AT MILAN'S SCALA OPERA

Milan, Jan. 30.

For the balance of the 1961-'62 opera season at La Scala here the following works are scheduled. It should be noted that the house does not operate every night in season as does the Metropolitan Opera of Manhattan. Hence the gaps below:

Jan. 27—"Il Tabarro," "Suor Angelica," "Gianni Schicchi."

Feb. 5—"La Sonnambula"; (22) "Il Prigioniera," "Turandot" (Busoni).

March 1—"Faust"; (8) "Balletto Imperiale," "La Giara," "Ballo dei Cadetti"; (14) "Cosi Fan Tutte" (at La Piccola Scala); (22) "Il Buon Soldato Sveik"; (28) "I Maestri Cantori Di Norimberga."

April 11—"Rigoletto"; (19) "Orfeo Ed Euridice"; (24) "Turandot" (Puccini).

May 4—"Pelleas Et Melisande"; (24) "Gli Ugonotti."

June 6—"La Fida Ninfa" (at La Piccola Scala); (14) "Atlantida" (debut).

Leventritt Piano Prize, But Public Excluded

Leventritt Foundation, which held no competition last season, sponsors a contest for pianists this year, with cash prize of $1,000 plus solo engagements with five major orchestras, including New York Philharmonic.

Finals will be closed to the public, in contrast to practice of 1959 and 1960. There has been no winner since 1959, the judges ruling that no entry in the 1960 was worthy of the Leventritt award.

College Dates As the New 'Road'

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

At least 2,000 colleges in the U.S. are buying talent four times a year for various entertainment programs, per Martin Jurow, prexy of Famous Artists. "Colleges are tremendous centers of entertainment for buyers today, particularly for small groups of three and four which can travel from one date to another without difficulty in transporation."

A small combo, he pointed out, can do three to four dates a week and pick up a minimum of $15,000 a week, if a powerhouse name.

Summer tent shows featuring music also can net 30 to 50% of the take for performers.

However, he prefers colleges which are an all year-round affair. "They have become enormous entertainment centers. Night clubs,

Liberace in Globe-Trot; Hong Kong and Bombay Dates, Also South Africa

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Liberace has added an around-the-world concert tour to his 1962 program of appearances which was launched Friday (26) in Phoenix. Stands are being arranged by Seymour Heller, personal manager of the pianist with Dick Gabbe.

Already set are two weeks of shows in 10 New Zealand cities through Auckland promoter Harry Miller, from June 16 through June 30. Two one-niters in Hong Kong and Bombay will be sandwiched between the New Zealand dates and South Africa, where engagements get underway July 3 in Johannesburg, continuing through July 16. Philip D. Levard of the Hugo Keleti Concert Agency is finalizing South African deal.

In addition to spheral trek, Liberace is committed for over 40 clubs, theatres and auditoriums in 10 states and Canada during balance of year.

More Old Paper Prints Converted

Washington, Jan. 30.

The Library of Congress expects to convert another 264,000 feet of paper print (fin de siecle vintage) films this year and next.

The preservation job being done on the pioneer commercial films, which were submitted in paper print instead of celluloid form for copyright purposes to the Library, is costing $61,000 a year.

President Kennedy's budget message to Congress disclosed that during 1961 the George Kleine collection of nitrate (flammable) film was converted into safety base film at a cost of $61,000.

Stars, Motives & Murray Schumach

Hollywood Timesman In Lofty Sneer at Those Who Advertise In Oscar Sweepstakes

By THOMAS F. PRYOR

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

The New York Times' Murray Schumach is "using old tricks," to take a line from the head on his Hollywood dispatch on Thursday (24), to create an impression that some inappropriate pre-election campaigning is going on for Academy Awards recognition and that the contenders are ignoring the Academy's recent plea for restraint in this regard.

Schumach is off-base in that he does not mention, to begin with, that the Academy board of governors did not propose any limitation on the amount of advertising. The restraints pertains only to the content of advertising.

However, the important point is that Schumach suggests that there is something unseemly about people who hope to be in the Oscar contest endeavoring to call attention to their pictures. "The nominating ballots have not even been sent out yet but the advertisements are already blooming in the local papers," observes the Timesman. "Nor is there any attempt to conceal the motives of the advertisers. Stars as well as producers are clamoring for Oscar nominations."

So what's wrong with that? Is it any more inappropriate for actor, director, writer, producer, etc. to bid for a nomination than it is for a candidate who aspires to the of-

Only $15-Mil Off

Sindlinger research outfit is making with pleased-as-punch over its 1961 theatre attendance report. For the reason that it bears out topkick Albert Sindlinger as a pretty fair nostradamus.

Exec, it seems, forecast some six months ago that 1961 receipts would hit $1,500,000,000. Turns out he overguessed by only some $15,000,000.

Why Pic Gloom? 1961 B.O. Up to $1,485,336,000

Film attendance and revenues rose last year from 1960, despite the fact fewer powerhouse pictures were in evidence. Also, notwithstanding the sundry expressions of gloom intratrade.

As disclosed this week by the Sindlinger analysts, '61 attendance hit 2,164,954,000, up 1.7%. Percentage reads more impressively, however, when translated into 38,450,000 more admissions. But more significant of the year's total is

Jack Rose and Melville Shavelson have the same deal as individuals with Paramount as they had when they were teamed, Rose has revealed. Writer-producer said they each multiple-picture arrangements calling for 33⅓% of the pix they make in addition to a salary.

Rose is currently on the third week of shooting "Who's Got the Action?," comedy based on his own original story and starring Dean Martin and Lana Turner. Picture has been in preparation almost a year and will be shooting until the first week in March on a budget of $2,000,000.

Rose said he and Shavelson sold all interests in joint production to

'EXPLOSIVENESS' KEY TO NEW TALENT OKAY

Major studios, no longer with performers under longterm contract for the most part, have abandoned the buildup of new talent and this necessary endeavor is left to independent filmmakers. And the constructive approach for the indie producer is to use "explosive" material.

Feldman, stressing all the while he thinks in "good taste" terms, asserts a newcomer's exposure in "raw material" has greater impact on the public.

LAG IN HELPFUL POINT OF VIEW

By VINCENT CANBY

Two indie New York filmmakers have nothing but nice words for the local police, but they are noticably reserved in their comments about the union situation. Ted Brkic and Randy Cox, who are corporately known as Bercox Productions, reported in New York last week that their first production, "Tracks in The Sand," shot entirely on New York locales, had been given great cooperation from the city's finest, but that one union local had manifest little or no understanding of the problems of tyro filmmakers, resulting in the other unions' pullout.

Picture, budgeted at just under $100,000 (and financed from private sources with a healthy assist from Pathe Labs), was originally planned as an all-union effort, but when the Studio Mechanics local failed to discuss "adjustments," other unions would not go through with anticipated cooperation. Picture, however, was shot with Screen Actors Guild players and is being edited under union regs. If they had met union demands, the producers reported, original budget would have been doubled into the neighborhood of about $200,000.

Both Brkic and Cox, being newcomers to the theatrical feature game, are reticent to criticize the union situation, except to say that their next effort will be all-union, and to say they feel the unions are doing a disservice by not encouraging lowbudget production by new people as a means of giving needed experience to the talent of tomorrow.

An associate of theirs states "Tracks in The Sand" might actually have been a somewhat better picture had it received union approval, thereby allowing trained technicians to do jobs which subsequently had to be done by neophytes. On a couple of occasions, this resulted in mistakes that required expensive retakes, and the quality of the picture was inevitably affected.

"Tracks," a contemporary drama set principally in Greenwich Village and directed by Brkic, was done in five weeks last summer, following a month of rehearsal. Brkic noted that since they never once shot in a studio, doing all their interiors in actual apart-

Pitch to Intellectuals & Worryers For U's USA-USSR Explosion Pic

A sort of nuclear question hangs over Universal—how to sell the public (domestic market) on a downbeat picture dealing with the No. 1 issue of the day?

Film is the British "Day the Earth Caught Fire," which cost U $350,000 for western hemisphere rights. Yarn depicts Soviet-U.S. simultaneous test explosions at either pole which get the planet off its axis and out of its orbit, headed for the sun and extinction. The horror is left unresolved at fadeout.

Anxiety in the U echelons is not whether the pic can turn a nice profit—they're convinced it can, obviously—but the shrewdest policy for tapping revenue. As a first step toward solution, but as part of the total effort in any case, the distrib is wooing the so-called opinion-makers per one of the most intensive pre-release screening schedules ever to engage a major company. Slated over a nine-week period, the showings are being aimed almost exclusively for the intelligentsia—scientists, diplomats, religionists, labor leaders, and such.

Pic has already been screened for such groups as the National Press Club, Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy, National Conference of Christians and Jews, National Lawyers' Guild, United World Federalists, Synagogue Council of America, and American Assn. for the United Nations.

The private screening technique, of course, has become almost standard procedure for the leading corporate entities—certainly with the "important" film—the extent to which it's employed being contingent on the nature of the film. Distributors have long felt there's nothing like beaucoup respected

MG Buys 'Smog', One of 7 Films From O'seas

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

"Smog," the Italian feature filmed early last year in Los Angeles, has been purchased for worldwide release by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer under the studio's multiple-picture deal with Titanus Productions of Italy. Film has been retitled "An Italian in America" and MGM has worldwide release.

S. Clementelli produced, with Franco Rossi directing. Annie Girardot, Renato Salvatore and Enrica Maria Salerno star.

Film is one of seven new European coproductions finalized for MGM. Two others are also with Titanus, including "The Family" filming in Italy with "La Dolce Vita" star Marcello Mastrolanni starring for director Vareria Zurlini. Studio has worldwide release except for Italy. Remaining Titanus film is "Tico and the Shark," produced by Geoffredo Lombardo and directed by F. Quilici. Latter is only for overseas release.

Also for overseas release only are "The Counterfeiters," completed by Jacques Bar's Cite Films. Giles Grangier directed, with Jean Gabin, Martine Carol and Bernard Blier starring. Release is worldwide except for France, Belgium, Luxembourg, Holland, Germany Austria and Switzerland.

Deal includes "Tomorrow is Another Day," which Bar is prepping. Simone Signoret stars with Renee

Fluke Diverts Cummings Stock Profit to MG

In what is regarded generally as an "oversight," Metro board member Nathan Cummings bought and sold shares in the company's stock within a six-month period and this is proscribed by Securities & Exchange Commission regulations. It's against the rule because an "insider," such as is Cummings, is called upon to hold newly-acquired securities for at least half a year. Infraction of SEC's Section 16 (very mild) was brought to light in public papers. All's been corrected by Cummings, and the MGM corporation makes the profit.

Cummings bought 3,400 MGM shares at $146,860. Sold same at $200,831. Profit was $53,870. But because he did not hold the shares for at least six months the profit goes to MGM, not Cummings.

DISNEYLAND REPLICA AT RADIO CITY, EASTER

Disneyland is to be reproduced on the stage of New York's Radio City Music Hall as part of the theatre's Easter show which opens early in April with Walt Disney's "Moon Pilot" on the screen. It's not unusual, of course, for such a major booking of a Disney feature. But this marks the first time that the California amusement park is to be done in replica on the boards.

Disney spokesman said the producer has had many offers to put on such a presentation but has turned all of them down until now.

Hall has had a crew at Disneyland the past month making preparations for the stage show, which will run 45 minutes. It's to be done partly with a film background, in CinemaScope, showing Disney and cartoon character Mickey Mouse, but mostly will be a theatrical stage offering.

Doubtful Properties & Surefire Stars: Chancy Economics of Picture-Making

By GENE ARNEEL

Charles K. Feldman, functioning both as agent and producer, asserts that he was the first in the percenter category to demand the high compensations for the artists in the film business.

Feldman reasons that a star with a doubtful property can carry the package on his or her own. This stellar performer thus is justified in asking for a bigger payoff.

On the other hand, says Feldman, there are players and other talent who will engage in a project which in itself has merit and in such an enterprise they don't demand so much remuneration.

Feldman for a longtime has been an independent voice in the field of agentry, while at the time taking credit as producer of the film adaptation of "Streetcar Named Desire" some 10 years ago, several in between, and now, "Walk on the Wild Side" for Columbia release.

Again speaking as agent he notes that certain thespians willingly go into a picture at far less than they had been receiving because the film offered to them can provide a springboard to a new kind of thespic career.

This particularly is a significant angle. It's old hat now but still worth mentioning that Frank Sinatra, accepting a reported $10,000, worked in "From Here to Eternity," in a secondary part but the role was so substantial that it launched Sinatra into orbit as a dramatic hotshot. He orbited also from the 10G for a single picture to a giant-sized corporation.

Per 'Nuremberg'

The major-caliber stars obviously couldn't ask Stanley Kramer for their usual percentage arrangements in working on "Judgment at Nuremberg." Still high-priced Judy Garland, Burt Lancaster and others herein saw in this effort an opportunity for gallant exposure and accepted far less than they could have gotten from other lesser-scale productions.

Katharine Hepburn allegedly is getting only $25,000 for "Long Day's Journey Into Night," via the Ely Landau production in New York.

Here's the point. The talent requests the tall money in certain circumstances. But, as guided by such reps as Feldman and his Famous Artists Agency, they need a prestige shot in the arm, too.

There has got to be a major exposure once in a while, even at less money than usual, or there may be little or no money at all in the future.

There's always the fear of too much exposure, obviously. It's not reaching to leftfield in saying that there has been such an abundance of Brigitte Bardot that her latest import, "The Truth," just about got lost in the American market.

Perhaps of equal importance is the fear of too little exposure. Although Judy Garland signed for and worked in only a secondary part in Kramer's "Nuremberg," the public acceptance and critical acclaim—one going hand in hand with the other—have served to re-establish this former moppet luminary.

Another significant point involves "re-categorizing." This is a case of, "Darling, I am growing Older." The oldtime juvenile and ingenue sensations of past simply are not so surefire as romantic leads anymore, and have got to fine a new niche in their careers. (There's hesitation in remarking they'll have to go into "character" parts.)

But there's no disputing the calendar; there is the age-wise transition and along with it the requisite "re-established" star status.

Teachers Attack Reagan Before He Makes Talk

St. Paul, Jan. 30.

Fearing a political talk, the St. Paul Federation of Teachers didn't want actor Ronald Reagan to be allowed to make an address to students at this city's largest high school.

The body protested to the local school board against the scheduling of the talk, but in vain. The board refused to call it off.

Brought to St. Paul by its area Chamber of Commerce to speak at that body's annual membership meeting and to participate in the local Winter Carnival celebration, Reagan was persona non grata to the teachers' organization. That's because he's generally considered to be a spokesman for the extreme right wing point of view.

In its protest letters to the schools' superintendent and school board members, the Teachers' Federation asked for the establishment of "a policy dealing with the presence of controversial issues in the forum of the school assembly."

Chamber of Commerce officials said that the "school administration" itself requested that Reagan be made available for the high school talk. It was stated that neither the Chamber nor anyone else had advance information as to the nature of the actor's talk, but that there was no reason to believe it would be political.

What Reagan did talk about mostly to the students was the danger of Communism, especially to youth. He spoke in several areas of political dispute, expressing the viewpoint that compulsory health insurance is not the answer to the problem of illness among old people and that the income tax is unfair.

'Non-Pro' Fest For Vancouver

Vancouver, B.C., Jan. 30.

Over 100 entries have been received from 25 countries for the Vancouver International Non-Professional Film Festival to be held at the new Queen Elizabeth Theatre Playhouse March 1, 2 and 3, and 8, 9, 10. Films entered will be judged by Guy Glover, executive producer for the National Film Board of Canada, Montreal; Osmond Borrodaile, Commonwealth Film Productions, Vancouver; and John Flory, adviser on non-theatrical features for Eastman Kodak of Rochester, N.Y.

Organizers claim this festival to be the first non-professional film meet to be held on this continent, also claim "firsts" in securing two entries from Russia as the first non-pro films from that country to be shown in any festival, and point out that the Vancouver event is the first international film festival to limit its entries to 16m films, all others accepting 8 or 9.5m reels.

Fest is operating under the patronage of Paris-headquartered Union Internationale du Cinema d'Amateur which reps 23 member countries in all parts of the world, but eschews the word "amateur" to escape the connotation of home movies. Hence the dubbing of Non-Professional, which UNICA has sanctioned.

Most prolific entrant to date is Italy, with 10 films, closely followed by Germany and France. Britain, Canada, the U.S., South Africa and New Zealand are also well represented, with scattered films submitted from Spain, Mexico, Cuba, Japan, India, Czechoslovakia and other European and Asian countries. Themes range from documentaries to fiction, and include scientific films, cartoons and children's films, in color and in black and white, with running times from one minute to one hour. One entry received was made by children, about children, at a boys' school in England.

Mrs. Frances Bodie is executive secretary. Address is listed at 506-1975 Pendrell Street, Vancouver 5, Canada.

Laemmle: Green and Evergreen

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

In celebrating 50 years of existence, as of 1962, Universal Pictures inevitably is throwing the spotlight of nostalgia on the late "Uncle Carl" Laemmle. As time is reckoned in terms of history and civilization, 50 years is a mere drop in the cosmic bucket but few corporate structures in the film business can claim to have stood so long. As a contrasting point a VARIETY staffer the other day computed some 80-odd radio stations in the United States which have been licensed 40 years. Yet radio was a mere funny noise in a magnetic crystal when the cinema had already achieved artistic masterpieces.

A Universal man puts it this way: "As you might suspect, the Universal story is quite a special one. Just the fact the company has been able to survive 50 years is significant. A dozen companies, including giants like RKO, have slipped by the wayside. Motion pictures is an ephemeral business at best, and for a studio to keep its head above water in face of such progressive onslaughts as a grasping Movie Trust (1910s), the necessity for going to huge million-dollar productions (1920s), the introduction of "talkies" (1927-1933), Wall Street enters the act (1930s), World War II (1941-45), searing production costs and loss of audience (middle 1950s),—really is something dramatic. And in the case of Universal, this company not only survived (although it had to sell its studio to do so), but today is more successful than it has ever been."

Knew No Hesitation

Laemmle was the characteristic immigrant boy who had little sense of the impossible. He was making a nice living (for 1905) running a store in Oshkosh, Wisconsin. When a Chicago adman, Robert Cochrane, said there were opportunities in Chicago Laemmle acted. He showed up, $2,500 savings in hand, ready to be introduced to opportunity.

Cochrane was thinking in terms of another retail shop but the 35-year-old German watched with fascination the Chicago queues to view a flicker show "Hale's Tours," an early travelog. Though his decision at first alarmed Cochrane and then enthused him, Laemmle opened a nickelodeon, the White Front, on Feb. 24, 1906. It was the small acorn from whence grew today's gnarled oak.

The process proved a fluid one, as was to be typical of other film fortunes. As an exhibitor Laemmle discovered the lacks in distribution and became a distributor. As a distributor he discovered the possibilities in production and became a pioneer. Cochrane was tagging along, then and for 30 years thereafter, making his own fortune alongside Laemmle.

Threw Darts At Map

Anecdota is piquant as to Laemmle's naive ignorance of the American markets. He set up a chain of exchanges almost literally on the basis of sending a man out from Chicago with instructions to stop at any big city he came to and set up a distribution point.

It was the shoestringer from Oshkosh who had the temerity to fight the monopoly which was endeavoring to impose its own autocratic terms on all motion picture production and distribution under patent franchises. The Trust in films, as later the attempted Trust in radio, was broken on the sheer anarchy of the business enterpriser in America. They refused to respect a monopoly based on patents. At least show business in both instances compelled the trusts to back down and get out.

Once Laemmle's first imprimatur became Universal, once Universal City became one of the first filmmaking factories on the west coast the saga was well begun. The evidence today is overwhelming that Laemmle did not always fully comprehend the significance of his "firsts" nor the implications of the precedents he set.

By 1909 Imp had shot "Hiawatha," its first "feature" (988 feet). In that same year Laemmle broke the business practice of not billing the actors, started building up the names of two charmers, Florence Lawrence and Mary Pickford. Thereby, he may have been the primary architect of "the star system" though it was probably D. W. Griffith with his closeups who really made faces recognizable to the myriad millions.

Universal City in 1915 was a Hollywood area pioneer filmmaking factory. U's first five-reeler, 'Traffic in Souls' 'came in 1916. Company records indicate that this was the first of Universal's product ever to be reviewed by the critics. "Birth of a Nation" had, of course, already stirred a nationwide notoriety in the press via its race-and-rape theme.

His War With Trust

Laemmle's war with the Trust had taken him to Cuba so that the Trust could not, as they then regularly did, confiscate all cameras it did not license. Among the Laemmle party in Cuba was King Baggott, famous later as a matinee idol but directing at the time.

Weakening of the Trust, a yearning for the States and the pestiferous mosquitoes of Cuba sent Laemmle and his folk back home. That was 1911.

Laemmle took off on one of his innumerable visits to Germany. While absent he learned that rival independents were now more threatening than the Trust. Harry E. Aitken, who had been distributing "Birth of a Nation," founded a new company, Majestic, and stole Mary Pickford, Uncle Carl's big star. Laemmle was able to revenge himself on Aitken by using his power as a distributor to force Majestic to pay higher sales terms. This, in turn, induced Aitken to form Mutual Film with Kuhn Loeb backing, perhaps the maiden participation in films of Wall Street. Reacting to the threat Laemmle expanded his distribution, acquired new allies and on June 8, 1912 formed Universal with himself as president. In at the birth were Bob Cochrane, Jules Brulatour, Charles Bauman, William Swanson, Pat Powers and David Horsely.

Already in 1912 there were some 20,000 exhibition situations in the United States. The film industry represented an estimated investment of $200,000,000. And the boom was still a decade off. With daily collections in cash of $500,000, in nickels and dimes, the bankers were aware of something pretty sexy by banker standards—namely hard money in dependable and increasing volume.

The more austere forms of entertainment were probably but little aware of "Uncle Carl" or Universal in 1912. It was still the heyday of the legitimate theatre. Thousands of playhouses around the country regularly booked travelling companies. Only two years before grand opera had been so competitive that Oscar Hammerstein I's Manhattan Opera threatened the survival of the Met. Vaudeville was surging, big time was starting a 20-year span of glory. Burlesque was an established medium and "Lyceum" thrived.

Actors on the boards at the time, all destined to have their climaxing experiences on the screen included the three Barrymores, Douglas Fairbanks, George Arliss, Elsie Ferguson, Pauline Frederick, Joseph Schildkraut, W. C. Fields, etc.

The full story of Universal is, of course, a study of the American economy itself, with its daring enterprises and its fabulous growth. There have been several major changes of policy and "image" (that much-bruited word of our day) at Universal, down to the present policy and image known as Milton Rackmil.

Phil Feldman to 20th; Part of Levathes' Studio Coordinating Exec Team

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

First of series of moves designed to strengthen his exec staff was made yesterday (Mon.) by 20th-Fox production topper Peter G. Levathes with appointment of Phil Feldman as chief of biz relations for studio.

Feldman becomes member of exec body which includes Ted Strauss, story editor; Owen McLean, castinghead; "Doc" Merman, production manager; John Healy, administration head.

Feldman swings over Feb. 5 from Broadcast Management Inc., where for past two years he's been exec veepee.

Legit's Sam Friedman As UA Publicity Chief

Film and legit publicist Sam Friedman has been named United Artists national publicity director, succeeding Mort Nathanson who resigned earlier to move to Joe E. Levine's Embassy Pictures.

Friedman recently completed a special assignment for UA on "West Side Story," and earlier was head of amusements publicity on "The Ten Commandments" and handled initial roadshow campaigns on "The Bridge on The River Kwai." In the theatrical field, Friedman was until recently a partner with Bill Doll in National Press Agents.

Clem Perry, Ex-Lopert, Establishes Own Distrib, Altura International

Clem Perry, former assistant to the president of Lopert Films, has formed his own indie distrib organization, Altura Films International, with h.q. in New York.

Altura is being launched initially with the New York, Philadelphia and Washington franchises on Metro's backlog of pre-1957 releases. In addition, Perry has the national distrib rights to four imports, the Yugoslav "Ninth Circle," the German "Roses For the Prosecutor," and two French pix, "Bedside Murder" and "Where Vultures Fly."

Perry's personal rep in Washington is Ira Sichelman, former 20th-Fox branch manager there, and in Philadelphia it's Bob Doyle, formerly with United Artists, Universal and Samuel Goldwyn. Marvin Friedlander, formerly with Lopert, is his N. Y. salesman. Altura will work through subdistribs elsewhere.

'Wild Side' Ads Will Stress Not For Youngsters

Charles K. Feldman's production of "Walk on the Wild Side," Columbia release, escaped condemnation by the National Legion of Decency—with a condition.

Film, which concerns a house of prostitution along with a lesbian angle, has been okayed for adults only ("B" rating) with the provision that the ads underline pic's unsuitability for youngsters. Feldman and Col agreed.

Catholic reviewing organization more and more is expressing concern anent film ads as being consistent with film content.

Nat Cohen's Many Deals With Yanks

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Anglo-Amalgamated Film Distributors Ltd., will produce 10 to 12 features in England this year at a cost of $8,000,000, according to Nat Cohen, its prexy. Starting April-May will be "The Patriot," to be produced by Barbon and directed by Lewis Gilbert, which Cohen view as "the biggest production in the history of the company" to cost $2,000,000. Producer-director team was responsible for "Sink the Bismarck" which 20th-Fox distributed in U. S.

Next most important undertaking will be "Billy Liar," estimated at $1,000,000 budget. It is based on London stage play by Keith Waterhouse and Willis Hall and introduced Albert Finney to film audiences.

Also on agenda are "Kind of Loving," budgeted at $750,000; "Carry on Cruising," $500,000; "Crooks Anonymous," $400,000; "Play It Cool," $400,000; and "The Iron Maiden," $750,000. "Cool" will be the first twist film produced in England, according to Cohen.

While in New York, Cohen concluded arrangements for American release of "The Criminal" with Joe Solomon's Fanfare Films, and "Carry on Regardless" and "Dentist On the Job" with David Emanuel's Governor Films.

He also set tv syndication pact with ABC Films Inc. for one hour "Kraft Mystery Theatre of the Air" for U. S. and Canada. Series aired over NBC last summer.

During visit here, Cohen hopes to conclude several co-production deals. He has already made one with American International Pictures for "Burn Witch Burn," starring Janet Blair and Peter Wyngarde with Julian Wintle and Leslie Parkyn producing.

Cohen, with Stewart Levy, chairman of AAFD, have bought the London Arts Theatre for $150,000. It seats 400 and will be used as "a nursery," Cohen asserts, starting March. Shakespearean plays will be produced in association with the Shakespeare Theatre of Stratford-on-Avon, which holds a one year lease.

British Lion Columbia Exec Shifts; Hoare Up, Bromhead to London

London, Jan. 30.

Kenneth Hargreaves and David Kingsley are resigning as joint managing directors of British Lion Columbia Films, effective March 2, with Victor Hoare, hitherto Lion International Corp.'s managing director, succeeding in the BLC post. Hargreaves is also ankling the managing directorship of Columbia Pictures here the same date.

Michael Bromhead, who has been British Lion's U. S. chief, with headquarters in New York for the last two years, is returning here to become Lion International's general manager. Bromhead is being replaced by Gary Darnall, who has been covering the Far Eastern beat for Lion. Sidney Safir has been upped from European rep to sales manager.

REGENTS RAP 'DIRTY WORD' PIC

New York Sound Track

Motion Pictures Properties Inc., of New York, has been dissolved, according to a certificate filed at Albany by Maggin & Swan.

Robert Favre LeBret, head of the Cannes film fest, and Charles Gombault, director of France Soir, in town . . . Indie distrib Ed Kingsley off to the Coast . . . Publicist Bernie Lewis is handling campaign on Kingsley's upcoming "Viridiana," cowinner of the top prize at last year's Cannes fest . . . Local filmmaker Robert Hughes is teaching a course in documentary films at City College here starting Feb. 5.

New four-picture deal Elvis Presley has with Metro starts off with "Mister, Will You Marry Me?" comedy to be produced by Jack Cummings.

Glasgow (Scotland) Evening Citizen serializing "The Secret Life of Mr. Fabulous," story of Frank Sinatra by Della West.

No pun necessarily intended: Television actor Stanley Sober will make his motion picture debut in Warner Bros.' "Days of Wine and Roses."

"Eleanor Parker: The Least-Heralded Great Actress" (as she was described by Dana Andrews) gets an extended profile story in March edition of National Board of Review mag. Author is Douglas McClelland, asociate editor of Music Vendor mag.

Robert Wise returns to Metro to produce-direct "The Haunting," following completion of his "Two for the Seesaw" for UA . . . Charles Bickford plays Lee Remick's father in Warner Bros., "Days of Wine and Roses" . . . Herbert Brodkin, producer of tv's "The Defenders," swings to theatrical film production for "The Deaf Heart," to roll this summer with United Artists financing and releasing . . . Edmond O'Brien into Sam Spiegel's "Lawrence of Arabia" . . . Samuel Bronston cast Charlton Heston as star of his "55 Days at Peking," to be lensed partially in Hong Kong and Bangkok in May . . . Bert L. Gordon prepping theatrical feature based on old English classic, "Beowulf" . . . Robert Radnitz acquired Jan De Hartog's "The Little Ark" for indie production in Holland . . . Red Buttons and Barbara Eden into 20th-Fox' "Five Weeks in a Balloon."

William Wyler and Lillian Hellman are cohosting a special screening of "The Children's Hour" at the Museum of Modern Art Friday (2) evening . . . Martin Moskowitz, assistant general sales manager at 20th, back at the homeoffice after a quick trip to Detroit . . . Having just wound up shooting "Phaedra" for UA release, and directing a legit play in Paris, producer-director Jules Dassin has arrived here to direct a Broadway show, "Isle of Children" . . . Stuart Whitman into Darryl Zanuck's "The Longest Day." Pretty soon it's going to be easier to list the people who are NOT in the picture rather than listing those who are. The "all-star" cast list is getting that long.

Jayne Mansfield wiggled breathlessly through town last week, tub-thumping 20th's "It Happened in Athens" as well as a new Trans-Lux tv series in which she does a guest shot . . . 20th has Irving Stone's Michaelangelo bestseller, "The Agony and The Ecstasy," which it plans to shoot before the end of the year . . . Salvatore Billitteri, east coast production head of AIP, has returned to New York from Rome . . . The New School for Social Research is offering two special film courses starting Feb. 5: "The Motion Picture as A Personal and Social Document," conducted by Joseph Goldberg, and "The Major Works on Film," by Burton Bendow.

Add comedians signed for Stanley Kramer's "It's A Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World": Jonathan Winters, Buddy Hackett, Mickey Rooney . . . Stuart Millar and Lawrence Turman have signed a multiple picture deal with the Mirisch Co., to start with "Sumnier Flight." This is in addition to Millar-Turman's previously announced four-pic deal with U.A. (Mirisch pix go through UA too.)

Producer Jerry Wald, who puts out a newsletter, has done some polling again, this time of film columnists cross-country. Of 300 solicited, some 200 responded, suggesting in the aggregate that what the American screen needs are more comedies and family pix, and urging more honesty and taste in advertising. Ad copy, many of them stated, should stress content of the film, with other ingredients held secondary.

Popcorn note: Dept. of Agriculture reports the '61 corn crop was generally excellent, and a record yield to boot.

Flu epidemic appears to be waning, but Universal decided to go ahead and innoculate the h.o. staff anyhow . . . Danny Kaye did a "Jack Benny" last Friday (26) by guest conducting the Oklahoma City Orch, his donation to its maintenance fund drive . . . Charles Theatre the downtown arty revival house, observes the General Strike for Peace today (Wed.)—not by going dark, but by throwing doors open for an all-day screening of peace-angled pix, mostly by young American filmmakers . . . Polly Bergen, in U's "Cape Fear," in from the Coast on a dual mission: to help bally the pic (a May release) and to ballyhoo the "Polly Bergen Book of Beauty, Fashion and Charm" (Prentice-Hall) . . . Edward Hyman, the AB-PT viceprez and "orderly release" apostle, booked his annual Coast visit for Feb. 4 to o.o. product and compile his next release sked for exhibs.

Another accolade for "El Cid," this one the Southern California Motion Picture Council merit citation. Incidentally, Feb. 13 perfs of the picture in all 11 U.S. keydates will benefit victims of that recent Peruvian landslide . . . "The Outsider" (U) dated by the Trans-Lux 52d St. for Feb. 7 . . . Arthur Christiansen, the retired London Daily Express ed, who screen bows per type in U's release of the British "Day the Earth Caught Fire," came in Monday (29) for a round of promo activities . . . The prideful mien of James Darby, manager of the Paramount in New Haven, is because son John was awarded an Army Commendation medal for rescuing a fellow paratrooper when latter's chute became fouled during an exercise jump over S. Carolina . . . Society of Motion Picture and TV Engineers powwows at the L.A. Ambassador April 29-May 4 . . . Rick Carrier, the director-writer whose Manhattan-shot "Strangers in the City" was picked up by Embassy Pictures, on the N.Y.-Rome air shuttle over the weekend.

John Griggs, the television, screen and legit actor who has one of the country's best collections of old silent features in his Englewood, N.J. home has acquired a full-length print of "The Gold Rush," plus "Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," "Potemkin" and "Sunrise," while in Hollywood recently he had a reunion with silent leading man James Kirkwood, now 85 and hearty.

Jules B. Weill's Colorama Features, of New York and Hollywood, has made a deal with Border Films to handle 13 Border productions in the U. S., starting with "Murder on The Campus."

Word from Madrid: Mercedes Alonso, after a series of click films, made her legit debut there as Ophelia to good notices but bad feelings backstage with Hamlet. So she was replaced by Victorio Rodriguez.

SEE FAST BUCK AIM IN DISPUTE

By JAMES L. CONNERS

Albany, Jan. 30.

Films Round the World's motive in pushing its right to use "that dirty word" in the junkie feature, "The Connection," is strictly commercial, hard-bitten and calculated. There is no aesthetic need for the word. It is not essential to the continuity of the story. The word constitutes the release's come-on, gimmick and invitation to sensation. It is fast buckism at its lowest expression.

Above, in essence, is the judgment of the N. Y. State Board of Regents in support of the decision of its licensing officer, Louis M. Pesce, in refusing a permit.

(Against this the author, director Shirley Clarke and proponents of "The Connection's" right to employ the word in dispute contend that junkies universally characterize their narcotic as such, and that artistic authenticity demands that the word be part of the dialog, as the author's concept of the characters requires.—Ed)

Of the taboo word which is the main though not only objection to the junkies tale, the Regents contend that "Nothing is gained by claiming that the word has been slangishly applied to a certain form of narcotics and that in the course of the picture, it may sometimes have been used in this sense. The elimination of this word in this script would not under any circumstances change the continuity, if there be any in this picture."

Quote continues:

"The fact the producer is insistent upon its use is, in our opinion, evidence in itself that he believes it conveys special interest of its own to the audience and is important in producing the desired effect of this most depressing picture. The use of this word would not be the same or have the same effect upon the audience as the use of a synonym. It is an obscene term recognized as such universally, and is intended to be used for such purpose; and it is our very definite opinion the State of New York should not approve or endorse its use upon the motion picture screen."

Regents further commented: "As far as we are concerned, there can be no effective argument, as is here made by the producer, that scenes or language, legally avail-

Community Aroused As Seized (Illegally?) Film On Trial Before Jury

Modesto, Cal., Jan. 30.

Plenty of sparks are expected to fly in obscenity trial involving nudie film, "Not Tonight, Henry," confiscated last Oct. 22 by District Attorney Alexander Wolfe from the Covell Theatre. Defendants in case, which has whole town interested, are Redwood Circuit, its district manager Rose Saso and house manager Mervin Worley, each is charged with exhibiting obscene matter.

Jury trial, for which panel of 12 was selected from first 13 persons called, will be test case of state's new statute which became effective last Sept. 15. One of issues which defense attorney Stanley Fleishman of Los Angeles is stressing in case is that what law thinks is obscene is different from what "average person" thinks obscene. Each juror has promised to follow the law in this respect. Another point at stake is that print was confiscated without a search warrant, which involved illegal search-and-seizure issue, but D.A. Wolfe commented: "A search warrant is unnecessary when an arrest is made."

Following three days of testimony, in which police officers and

Pix Biz to N.Y. Times: Dear Ed, Wider Ad Spread Much Deserved

The New York Times film ad pages continue to be a source of industry irritation, to both large distribs and small exhibs alike.

To the distribs, the Times' practice of bunching together its huge assortment of film ads in the Sunday film section, one on top of another, so that it resembles (in the words of one film exec) the resort section, has been particularly galling. Since they pay premium rates, the distribs feel their copy should be relieved by editorial matter, even though, of course, this would require the Times to spread the film section over additional pages.

In the Sunday, Jan. 14, issue, 20th-Fox veep Charles Einfeld solved the problem, at least temporarily. 20th bought a five-column display ad heralding the opening of "Tender Is The Night." Then, to "protect" and set off the display ad, 20th bought a sixth column, to the left of the display ad, in which it ran a full-column reader ad looking somewhat like the Times' regular editorial matter. The "reader," reportedly written by David Selznick, was headed "An Adult 'Night,'" and chattily discussed the film in details seldom permitted in a display ad ("It

Negro Heads Art Dept.

Harold Van Riel, a staff advertising designer at 20th-Fox for the last 20 years, has been named the company's advertising art director, a post which has been vacant since 1956 when Victor Sedlow resigned.

Van Riel is believed to be the first Negro to hold a comparable post at a major company.

Paramount-Lux In Italy Sales Pact?

Paramount offices in Italy and the Italian Lux Films have under consideration a merger of their distribution activities in Italy.

This would be in line with the growing trend toward such amalgamations in foreign countries.

Mantle and Maris As A 'Need No Introduction' Act For Columbia Pics

The setting for the press conference was appropriate enough, this being the Toots Shor Restaurant which, despite the proprietor's customary upstaging of sports figures, draws the sport figures. It was Friday (26) at three in the afternoon and the big room on the second floor of the Manhattan saloon was well attended.

Given the spotlight were Mickey Mantle and Roger Maris. Occasion was the signing of a pic contract. They got themselves hired by Columbia for the top roles in a "heart-warming story" (sez Col) titled "Safe at Home!" Need for the exclamation point was not explained.

The two Yankee baseball sensations are to play themselves in the production which is to be lensed this spring during training at the Fort Lauderdale, Fla., training camp this spring. It's billed as a Naud-Hamilburg production to be directed by Walter Doniger.

A reporter on the premises, remiss, couldn't get the name of one spokesman who expressed admiration for Col's "genius" in signing Maris and Mantle.

Col ought to forgive any sarcasm, however, for the deal obviously is a coup for the company and particularly Loe Jaffe, 1st v.p. It's to be doubted if the other MM initials (Marilyn Monroe) ever got more publicity than sluggers Mickey and Roger.

The two diamond merchants, incidentally, scored nicely with the press, each an affable personability (on basis of show caught) and only too willing to pose for the photographers and sign autographs for the offsprings of the fourth estaters.

It's understood Mantle and Maris contracted for $50,000 each as guarantee against 25% each of the negative ownership of "Safe at Home."

MOVIELAB SUES 702

Walkout Called Mystifying And Breaking Contract

Movielab film processing labs has sued in N.Y. Federal Court for $500,000 damages from striking Local 702, Motion Picture Laboratory Technicians (IATSE). The walkout started on Jan. 20, but the company says it knows of no reason for the dispute, has offered to submit the hassle to arbitration but that the union declines.

Suit contends the strike violates a collective bargaining agreement reached last Dec. 1 and which extends to October, 1965. Also named as defendants are the local's president, Richard A. Granaglia, and the secretary-treasurer.

Film Delivery Firm Back In Biz With Bearable New Teamsters' Scale

San Francisco, Jan. 30.

Overnite Motor Express, Northern California film delivery firm which closed its doors earlier this month rather than bow to what it called teamsters' "excessive demands," is back in business, having won at least a partial victory over teamster Local 85.

Trucking firm got quick agreement—after shutting down—for wage raises of 28c hourly on night crew, 17c on day crew, with double time for sixth day of work. Union, at point this Gilboy firm decided to close up, had been asking 60c more an hour for nights, 29c for days, triple time on sixth day. Scale before new pact was negotiated was $3.0175 hourly.

Some 35 truckers are affected. Firm, with 90% of its business in film delivery, has Los Angeles, Fresno, Redding, Eureka and Reno branches, main office in Frisco. An official said no sixth-day work would be done at all, and exhibitors agreed principal effect of new pact would be to force clearances and availabilities back somewhat because of no weekend deliveries.

SIDNEY DENEAU AS WALTER READE VEEP

Sidney G. Deneau, who recently resigned as veep and assistant general sales manager of Paramount Film Distributing Corp., is joining Walter Reade Inc. as vicepresident.

He'll function in an exec capacity and also supervise the film buying and booking for the Reade theatre circuit, including the New York firstruns now handled by Walter Reade Jr., company head, and his veep-assistant Sheldon Gunsberg. Deneau will also serve on Walter Reade Inc.'s exec committee.

The Reade enterprises are now in process of merging with Sterling Television, a publicly held corporation.

It was a decade ago that producer Charles K. Feldman presented "Streetcar Named Desire," adapting this stage success to the screen. At the time of its offering it was considered a frank mirroring of perhaps imagined contemporary mores.

Producer Feldman is at it again, obviously seeking a new kind of breakthrough on the kind of material which should be, or could be, presented on the screen.

As in the case of "Streetcar," filmmaker Feldman shows good taste. Actually the difficult subject is adroitly handled although director Edward Dmytryk and screenwriters John Fante and Edmund Morris were walking on eggshells.

For it's obvious that in their treating of prostitution and lesbianism they did not want to be offensive to anyone. The result is a somewhat watered-downing of the Nelson Algren story of the Doll House in New Orleans and the madame's affection for one of the girls.

The absence of boldness in treatment renders the completed product just a little sterile. It's interesting all the way, but since the matter was decided upon in the first place, why not more deliberately?

It's in this respect that the presentation seems cagey, and, consequently, doesn't have the dramatic wallop it should have. Yet, to repeat, it's interesting. Mass audiences doubtless will go for it—for it plays out rhythmetically well—but critical kudos are not to be looked for. There's really not much of aesthetic significance to be found in the Algren adaptation.

Laurence Harvey plays a drifter in search of his lady, Capucine. He does it well but not strikingly. Capucine, it turns out, is a member of the Doll House, showing a classic, Garbo-type beauty, but somehow limited as to range in emotionality via script and/or direction.

Jane Fonda cops the show (audiences will say) with her hoydenish behavior as another member of the House and Just-Lucky-I-Guess Alumnus of the freightcar transportation circuit. Barbara Stanwyck is steely as the madame who looks to Capucine for the "affection" she cannot find in her maimed husband. Anne Baxter plays well as a cafe operator with normal affections toward Harvey.

Production is colorfully set and a song by Mack David and Elmer Bernstein offers substantial backgrounding.

Dmytryk maintains a nice pace in direction—that is, a steady pace—but more forcefulness in both his direction and the writing might have provided more dramatic impact. Musical backgrounding generally is appropriately sensitive and editing is sufficiently tight. Gene.

Edele's Added Chores

Paramount should make plenty of boxoffice yen with Steve Parker's production of "My Geisha," a picture that won't be everyone's cup of orange pekoe but one that looms as slick, glamorous entertainment for the average easygoing filmgoer. Although hampered by a transparent plot, a lean and implausible one-joke premise and a tendency to fluctuate uneasily between comedy and drama, the picture has been richly and elaborately produced on location in Japan, cast with perception and a sharp eye for marquee juxtaposition.

A certain amount of elementary but traditionally evasive information on the Japanese Geisha Girl weaves helpfully through Norman Krasna's brittle screenplay about an American film actress (Shirley MacLaine) who blithely and vainly executes a monumental practical joke on her insecure director-husband (Yves Montand) by masquerading as a Geisha to win the part of "Madame Butterfly" in his arty production of same in Japan. To put it mildly, it is asking a lot of an audience to go along with such a premise.

Just as the comedy is about to peter out, there is a radical swerve into sentiment and moral significance. Montand, abruptly (and at long last) cognizant of what is transpiring, and deeply hurt, proposes B-girl monkeyshines to his bewildered "G-girl" wife, and the marriage seems about to go to H. But honorable old Japanese proverb intervenes. All is serene at the climax.

Miss MacLaine gives her customary spirited portrayal in the title role, yet skillfully submerges her unpredictably gregarious personality into that of the dainty, tranquil Geisha for the bulk of the proceedings. Montand has his moments, but has yet to find the U.S. screen vehicle to ideally suit his special charm and personality. Edward G. Robinson does well by his role of a lovably hapless major studio producer, but his vast dramatic and comedic resources seem hemmed in by the assignment. Robert Cummings, astonishingly youthful, is a nice fit as a wolfish leading man. It's good to have him back on the theatre screen. A special impression is made in support by Yoko Tani, and there are satisfactory assists by Tatsuo Saito, Alex Gerry, Nobuo Chiba, Ichiro Hayawaka and George Furness.

Although the going thins out and slows down in spots, director Jack Cardiff keeps the picture visually stimulating, with the accomplished aid of cameraman Shunichiro Nakao and editor Archie Marshek. Interiors dominate the film, but there are one or two travelog-like interludes striking to the eye. Further credit for a glamorous production is due are director Arthur Lonergan and costume designer Edith Head. Franz Waxman's score, in keeping with plot, stresses classical and operatic strains, and does so tastefully. Tube.

In "Twenty Plus Two," Allied Artists has an overlong, but diverting, murder mystery melodrama for support or spot top placement in situations that cater to whodunit buffs. Written and produced by Frank Gruber, the film is an involved and verbose counterpart of a pulp fiction piece, with dialog that often sounds as if it was translated from a police blotter and glib-talking characters who often behave as if breaking and entering was the only way to enter a scene—in short, the standard operating procedure of this minor, though popular, story-telling form.

David Janssen, of "Richard Diamond" television fame, is in his customary element as a remarkably composed and perceptive missing-heir tracer who methodically sniffs out the mystery of a long lost heiress who vanished after an unhealthy skirmish with a sex fiend, later film star—an uncomfortable parallel. Who should the girl turn out to be but an old flame of the hero's, whom he met in Tokyo during the Korean War. Gruber's fiction concentrates on the machinery of sleuthery, with character substance and development a poor second. But that's not apt to trouble those who prefer their whodunits straight, and not distilled by too many fancy whys and wherefores.

Janssen, an actor with star quality, gives a cocky, competent performance, somewhat mannered and tarnished by a tendency to swallow dialog, but on the whole poised and relaxed, creating a kind of "Diamond" in the rough character. Jeanne Crain is attractive as ever in a secondary femme role, a kind of afterthought part to weave another pretty girl into the pattern. Dina Merrill draws the central distaff character, and handles it with assurance. Jacques Aubuchon, William Demarest and Agnes Moorehead are especially strong, and there are other efficient portrayals by Brad Dexter, Robert Strauss, Fredd Wayne, George N. Neise, Mort Mills and Will Wright.

Joseph M. Newman's direction keeps the plot machinery humming, with stalwart aid from cameraman Carl Guthrie and editor George White. David Milton's sets occasionally seem a trifle extravagant to suit the status of the characters. Gerald Fried's score appropriately alternates between the brassy and the sexy, depending on whether the hero is moving or just plain operating. Tube.

Le Tracassin

(The Busybody)

(FRENCH)

Paris, Jan. 23.

Pathe release of Raoul Ploquin-Pathe production. Stars Bourvil; features Pierrette Bruno, Armand Mestral, Maria Pacome. Directed by Alex Joffe. Screenplay, Joffe Jean-Bernard Luc; camera, Marc Fossard; editor, Eric Pluet. At Marignan, Paris. Running time, 115 MINS.

| Mrs. Gonzales | Maria Pacome |

Satirical, slapstick comedy looks at a hectic day in the life of a busy ordinary Frenchman. It lampoons automation, city crowding, traffic problems, and manages to inject some plot via the hero's trying to get an apartment so he can marry his long-waiting fiancee. Having some bright ideas, this is somewhat stretched and overlong. It's mainly for special situations abroad.

The middleaged little man, Bourvil, decides to buy his fiancee some things and himself a new wardrobe to celebrate their second year of engagement. He also has a sister about to give birth to a baby. But all this leads to problems of parking and a bevy of tickets, a run-in with a woman who turns out to be his boss' new flame and missing out on an apartment.

Working for a tranquilizer pill firm, Bourvil gulps these down through his trials and ends in a fit of euphoria and laughing as he is fired, almost loses his girl and gets arrested. This is an explosively funny passage helped by his perfection in clowning, timing and miming.

Being French it has him and the fiancee intimate though they need an apartment to get married. And, being a comedy it has its happy ending. Main flaw is that there is no story and the gags sometimes run down. Alex Joffe has directed conscientiously and used trick work well. But it lacks the human depth and deeper comic perception and invention.

But it does garner many yocks. Cut down, this pic could be of playoff value abroad on its general good humor and spoofing of over-animated city life. Bourvil, as the ordinary man, keeps the film together on his clever portrayal and underlining of foibles. Technical qualities are good. Mosk.

Victim

British import, which Pathe-America has for U.S.-Canada, has been denied a Production Code Seal. Distribution is geared primarily for specialty and art circuit playoff.

Story is a suspense yarn depicting attempted blackmail of a homosexual lawyer. VARIETY's Rich, reviewing pic from London last Sept. 6, stressed that film "has something pertinent to say about an urgent social problem but in its own right is a well-written, well-directed thriller-drama that is sustained entertainment. It should mean big b.o. among thoughtful audiences." Point was made that disappointment awaits anyone expecting to gander the sensational. Several homo characters, per reviewer, "are not caricatures but are shown as varying human beings caught up . . . in something that is probably more medical than criminal."

All performances were rated topnotch, with Dirk Bogarde (the lawyer) a standout. Other names with marquee value are Sylvia Syms and Dennis Price. Withal, said critic, a film made with "obvious sincerity and intelligence."

"Deadly Duo" is one of the lesser efforts to roll off the assembly line of Harvard Film Corp., United Artists' small picture shop headed by Robert E. Kent. It will fill out a double bill as designed, but, except for its apt brevity, fails to smoothly perform its utility function.

The Owen Harris melodrama, from a novel by Richard Jessup, is concerned with identical twin sisters. It is the old formula: one angelic, one diabolic. The wicked one masquerades as the good one to haul in some big money that is coming to the latter, even goes so far as to attempt to rub out her sis, but the plot backfires in a hasty, ludicrous climax.

Marcia Henderson brings contrast to her dual delineation. Craig Hill is competent and appealing as a young attorney with integrity. Irene Tedrow is effective as a bitter mother-in-law who comes to see the error of her ways. Others in prominent roles are Dayton Lummis, Carlos Romero, David Renard and Robert Lowery.

Reginald LeBorg's direction is rather stiff and artificial, especially in the film's awkward, let's-get-it-over-with conclusion. Art, musical and technical production contributions are adequate. Tube.

Cuanto Vale tu Hijo

(What Is Your Child Worth?)

(MEXICAN)

Mexico City, Jan. 30.

Peliculas Nacionales release of Producciones Matouk production. Stars Julio Aldama, Lilia Prado; features Amanda del Llano, Beto el Boticario, Juan Carlos Ortiz and special role by Rosa Carmina. Directed by Mauricio de la Serna. Screenplay, Mauricio de la Serna from original by Dino Maiuri; camera, Manuel Gomez Urquiza; music, Sergio Guerrero. At Orfeon Theatre, Mexico City. Running time, 90 MINS.

Film revolves around young Juan Carlos Ortiz, hit by a speeding car and taken to a hospital where, as doctors fight for his life, flashback theme develops a story of a humble Mexican family, with the picture striving not too successfully to put across social messages dealing with such problems as shanty towns, street peddlars, etc.

Principal merit of film, done with minimum budget and reflecting this in photography and settings, is that the public at which it is aimed obviously will identify the struggling young couple. And with this identification, their hopes, fears, and a succession of incidents in their daily routine as they seek fortune and a better life for their child in the big city. The fight for subsistence, shelter and adjustment to complexities of city life are rounded out with the fleeting moments of happiness, misery and sorrows, with all this sometimes over-melodramatically presented.

Actors do the best they can with roles assigned them. However, the picture will have a certain appeal in substandard Latin American areas with its mirroring of sordidness of life in the lower strata of south of the border society. Emil.

Still another sketch pic in a still lively cycle here. This one deals with four tales of zany, innocent, logically perverse or conniving Paris girls. It is sentimental, futile, puerile and smothers its free-wheeling attitude toward sex in talk. But it has some sprightly misses in various stages of undress, and some zesty moments to make this a possible playoff bet, but arty theatre chances seem more limited.

In one sequence, a dizzy dancer barges in on a man's cab to take him on a whirl of Paris. He turns out to be an American impresario and she gets a role in Yank pix. Second has a faithful wife nonplussed when her husband tells her an old flame thinks she was a bad lover.

Then comes a tale of a girl who seduces her best friend's boyfriend to show her she is not right in thinking him the perfect man. Last is an innocent who invents an affair to dazzle her friends but finally meets a young rock-and-roller for first love. The twist and r-and-r are thus dragged in to give this an up-to-date slant.

Sketches are simply mounted and do exude the old French pic myths of the easy French misses and the treating of sex as an eternal affair that should not be taken too seriously. Dany Saval, Francoise Arnoul, Francoise Brion, Dany Robin and Catherine Deneuve are all svelte lookers and come across agreeably.

Main appeal is the prowess of these girls. Men are secondary figures. Direction is adequate but sans the wit and punch to make these little interludes more pungent and graceful. Technical credits are good. Pic needs a hard sell but has the handles for possible chances abroad if well sold and promoted. Mosk.

'LOVERS' QUARREL, OHIO STYLE

Numerically, It's Downward

[Per Theatre Owners of America]

Periodically there come, from various industry quarters, euphoric pronouncements that product supply evidences impovement. These are played dutifully by the trade organs even when the strong suspicion lurks that more will o' the wisp than celluloid is in the making.

The suspicion is borne out by year-to-year comparisons which indicate that American filmmaking—encompassing major studio and independent—is on the downcurve. Source is the latest bulletin of Theatre Owners of America, which pointedly belies the gospelists in its own ranks who year to year (and in between) proffer the rosy prediction of more to come.

Circuit execs, of course, are not alone in the roseate promise, but theirs is the preponderant expression, repeatedly, that product shall soon flow something like honey. The arresting fact is that, with one or two exceptions, the producing outfits play down quantity. Instead of the numbers game, they are more prone to talk of orientation—of new market conditions, of the big property-big budget attunement. Ergo, a 20th-Fox declares that anything less than $2,000,000 venture is not in tune with current market demands; and other majors disclose a similar bias.

In short, few wish to spell out the invidious, even though, on the other hand, it's freely conceded anyway.

At any rate, and assuming the accuracy of TOA's figures, the decline in Hollywood output has been continuous in recent years. For 1958, the U. S. production count was 192. For '59 through '61 it was, respectively, 181, 164 and 161 (only Warners was consistent, neither rising nor dipping, but finishing 12 pix in each of the four years).

Those figures, in fairness, reflect only completions. In terms of films actually released, the four-year count, starting with 1958, was 299, 224, 239 and 220. Significantly, of course, 1961 not only was down from the preceding year, but also under '59. Whichever set of figures are adduced, then, the fact remains that the beguiling forecasts were of wish-and-prayer fabric.

The footnote to this, which tends to accent the numerical downbeat, is the fact that American filmmakers have started only two features since Jan. 1, the lowest count for the period in the past six years. Furthermore, only five additional films are slated to roll during the balance of January, and this rates as the poorest collective production showing in many years.

For comparisons, 15 pix were underway this time last year, with the highest total for the first threeweek of a January tallied in 1958 when 17 films were in production.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

After a period of being relatively aloof, the Wall St. brokerages again are giving the nod to Decca Records, i.e., Universal Pictures. Expressions of confidence in Decca have come of late from such downtown dealers as Eastman, Dillon; Hayden, Stone; Thomson McKinnon and Pershing & Co.

Eastman, Dillon, for instance, opts Decca as one of five stocks to buy in '62, per its January report to investors. Pointing out that 1961 earnings will be down (this was prior to U's confirming report), the brokerage takes a bullish view of Universal's product for '62—already evidenced by "Flower Drum Song," and in prospect notably with "Cape Fear," "Spiral Road," "Lover Come Back" and "Touch of Ming," which, incidentally, should by hypoed by its Radio City Music Hall, N.Y., date.

The downtown analysts, however, are plenty aware of supplemental factors tending at this time to enhance Universal—the still-withheld post-48s as a tv staple and, more importantly, the being-dickered possible alignment with Music Corp. of America as a potent distrib-producer match.

There's further impetus, too—the current Jubilee Year sales drive, also the fact that Decca's disking activities in '61 were markedly upbeat.

"The U. S. is the most hypocritical nation in the world on the subject of sex. Americans are the laughing stock of Europe because of it. The important issues of life are not faced in the average American home." Thus Bette Davis, quoted by Dora Albert in Weekend Magazine. "I think 'Never on Sunday' is a wonderful picture for most children of 13, 14 or 15. I'd be happy to have B.D. (her daughter Barbara, 14) see it. Why not? She can sort out the values in such pictures . . . Often children are worse off if they haven't had exposure to the facts about sex. If they suddenly discover in their teens that there's such a thing in the world, they're apt to think sex dirty instead of accepting it as a part of life."

"It is seldom that a theatre manager will admit that he is playing a 'woman's picture' (This usually keeps the male audience away!) . . . but we are so sure that this feature will be accepted by all audiences that we are proud to announce this attraction as just a motion picture!" That bit of candor, all in caps, appeared in Ottawa daily ads for Odeon Theatres' Elmdale and Bob Maynard's Somerset Theatre the day before "Back Street" opened.

"Lawrence of Arabia" is contributing to Spain's growing reputation as a film center where almost every type of location site is available. In the case of "Lawrence," producer Sam Spiegel and director David Lean are now in Seville taking full advantage of natural interiors reproducing locals of such troubled Near East cities as Cairo, Damascus, and Jerusalem. Sites lined up in the Andalucian capital include General Allenby's 1916 Cairo Hq. which is being filmed in the Arabian-styled exhibition building in the Plaza de Espana. This natural decor also houses the Arabian Bureau and junior officer's club complete with bar and billiard tables.

The basement of the nearby Peruvian Consulate resurrects the mapping room where Lawrence started his career. The Teatro Lope de Vega, also next door, will become the town hall of Damascus — a scene of violent outbreaks after Lawrence captured the city.

Also the Casa de Pilatos, which the Marquis of Tarifa built in 1519 as an exact replica of Pilate's house in Jerusalem (commemorating his pilgrimage to the Holy Land), is now being converted with almost no change to Allenby's Hq. in Jerusalem. The monumental Alcazar, a must for tourists in this part of Spain, will provide Damascus-like courtyards and other Middle East architectural features.

National Theatres & Television stockholders are to be asked to approve name change of circuit to National General Corp., at annual meeting on Feb. 20. Decision to change name, voted by directorate Dec. 14, came as result of NT&T's entry into more general activities, according to prexy Eugene V. Klein, who said while corporation is continuing its theatre exhibition biz it proposes "to enlarge and diversify its scope of activities."

Change will not affect names of principal subsidiaries, including Fox West Coast, Fox Inter-Mountain, and Fox Midwest Theatres Inc.

CALLED BORESOME AND PERVERTED

Columbus, O., Jan. 30.

The Ohio Supreme Court rendered two opposite rulings in connection with the French motion picture, "The Lovers," but pointed out there was no inconsistency between the decisions in the two cases involving the same film because charges against the two theatre managers involved had been filed under different sections of the law.

The high court upheld the conviction of Nico Jacobellis, manager of Heights Art Theatre at Cleveland Heights, for showing the imported film in November, 1959. In this case, the manager was charged under a law that provides "no person shall knowingly . . . exhibit . . . or have in his possession or under his control an obscene, lewd, or lascivious . . . motion picture film." Jacobellis, who had maintained the law under which he was prosecuted is "too vague," had been fined $2,500 in Cuyahoga County Common Pleas Court. The case was tried in May-June, 1960.

The Cuyahoga County judges had remanded Jacobellis to jail for six days while a probation report was prepared. His counsel, Bennett Kleinman, said Jacobellis' conviction would be appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The Ohio Supreme Court viewed "The Lovers" and Judge William D. Radcliff, who wrote the decision, said:

To me it was 87 minutes of boredom induced by the vapid drivel appearing on the screen, and three minutes of complete revulsion during the showing of an act of perverted obscenity. 'The Lovers' was not hard-core pornography, that is, filth for filth's sake. It was worse. It was filth for money's sake."

Five judges concurred, Judge Kingsley Taft concurred in part, and Judge Thomas J. Herbert dissented.

In the Jacobellis case, the high court held the prescribed standard of "obscene" used in the statute is not ambiguous, as counsel for the theatre manager contended. The court said, "The test applied to determine obscenity is not what the individual involved deems obscene, but rather what the community as a whole would consider obscene—

Plato Skouras Scolds Catholics For Brushing 'Francis of Assisi'

St. Paul, Jan. 30.

In a letter to Mother Mary Jude, at Villa Maria academy Frontenac, Minn., near here, producer Plato Skouras scolds the Catholic clergy, press and laymen. He feels Catholics haven't given adequate support to his "Francis of Assisi," 20th-Fox film which deals with the life of the saint.

Skouras also takes a slap at the newspaper critics who, in his opinion, didn't give the picture as favorable reviews as it merited. And he hits out, too, at that part of the public which as been attacking Hollywood for not turning out enough "good" films, but that fails to patronize them when these sort of "good" pictures are available.

The letter, just received, is in reply to one which Mother Jude wrote to Skouras last November. It's prompted, he explains, by the fact that "Francis" has proved to be a boxoffice bust.

Mother Jude turned over the Skouras letter to St. Paul Dispatch amusement editor Bill Diehl who devoted an entire one of his columns to quoting from it and expressing his disagreements with much of what she and the 20th-Fox producer contend.

"Frankly, I made 'Francis' with the idea of having it be a commercial success," wrote Skouras. "If that were not the case, not only would I create a bad reputation for myself with the banks and film distribution companies, but I also would cause a severe setback to the plans of any other producer desiring to make a religious film."

While the picture did receive some degree of support from the Catholic press, several important Catholic newspapers attacked it

Gideon Bachmann, president of the American Federation of Film Societies, who has been overseas 10 months, returned last week to Manhattan. While away he made 100 radio tapes for his WABI, N.Y. series.

Bachmann was on jury at Locarno and Mannheim film festivals and critics' juries at Cannes and Berlin. His itinerary included the Moscow festival and contacts with the film societies of France, Belgium, Britain, Poland, Germany, Switzerland and Israel.

Loew's Capitol Goes Cinerama

Capitol Theatre, Loew's flagship on Broadway, is going Super-Cinerama. This 4,820-seat house is set for conversion (at a reported cost of $1,200,000) into a showcase for the upcoming Metro-Cinerama productions, first of which is to be "How the West Was Won," due next summer.

Major film distributors thus are losing another opportunity for Gotham window dressing. (Actually, some of them don't give a hoot in view of the number of productions which in the relatively recent period have either ducked Broadway entirely or played the Street at a smaller house in conjunction with an east side location.)

Nomenclature is to be changed to Loew's Cinerama with the "West" picture. And this is to be presented on a reserved-seat basis with 10 showings weekly.

As obtains with Super-Cinerama theatres now up, or going up, around the country, the entire front wall of the Cap will be the actual screen with the screen images coming from three projectors. This will mean new seating arrangements and a re-do in general.

Thus departs the Cap from conventional theatre business. Major blow to the status of firstrun exhibition on Manhattan's main stem, the first one, was the demise of National Theatres' Roxy, which was octopussed into the Taft Hotel.

National Boxoffice Survey

Biz Improves; 'One, Two' New Champ, 'Song' 2d, 'Story' 3rd 'Night' 4th, 'El Cid' 5th

Launching of new, stronger screen fare and more normal winter weather both are contributing to a nice upbeat at firstruns covered by Variety in current session. Nearly every key city is being helped by new product, some of it the first brought in since the yearend holidays.

"One, Two, Three" (UA), which gradually has been getting more and more playdates, is pushing up to No. 1 spot this stanza. It is nosing out "Flower Drum Song" (U), which has been on top for weeks. Latter, of course, is landing second position although now playing in fifth and sixth stanzas in many keys.

"West Side Story" (UA) is capturing third place. It was second a week ago. "Tender Is Night" (20th), just out this week to any extent, is taking fourth position. "El Cid" (AA) is slipping back to fifth spot as compared with third place a week ago.

"King of Kings" (M-G) is finishing sixth. "The Innocents" (20th) again is winding up seventh, like last stanza. "Bachelor Flat" (20th) will be eighth. It was ninth last session.

"Roman Spring" (WB) will cop 9th spot. "Pocketful of Miracles" (UA), sixth last week, is finishing 10th. "Sail Crooked Ship" (Col) is taking 11th place while "Second Time Around" (20th) rounds out the Top 12.

"The Mark" (Cont) and "Two Women" (Indie) are the runner-up films.

"View From Bridge" (Cont) is one of new strong entries. It shapes very big at N. Y. DeMille and a new record on first at Sutton there. "Journey To Seventh Planet" (AI) looms smash on opener in Omaha.

"Too Late Blues" (Par), okay in Boston, looks good in Omaha but slow in Providence. "Happy Thieves" (UA) is okay in Washington. "Singer, Not the Song" (20th), mild in Washington, looms neat in Louisville.

"Colossus of Rhodes" (M-G) is rated fine in Detroit. "Hey, Let's Twist" (Par), shapes sad in Seattle and Portland, Ore.

"La Belle Americaine" (Cont), okay in Boston, is great in N. Y. "Rocco and Bros." (Astor), sharp in Chi, looks big in Philly.

"Purple Noon" (Times), which had such a prosperous run in N. Y., looms good in Balto, Pitt and Washington.

"Lover Come Back" (U), due on Feb. 8 at N. Y. Music Hall, still is great in L. A. on extended-run. "Murder She Said" (M-G) continues sockeroo in N. Y. at arty Baronet.

'Visit' 20th's Only O'Seas Pic of '62

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Only new film planned for production abroad by 20th-Fox this year will be "The Visit," starring Ingrid Bergman and Anthony Quinn. Latter will also be associate producer with Henry T. Weinstein carrying full credit as producer. It rolls in September.

Peter G. Levathes, 20th production topper, asserts producer Sam Engel winds principal photography on "The Lion" Feb. 14, Engel returns to London to start cutting William Holden starrer.

This will leave three other company producers active in Europe for next several months: Walter Wagner on "Cleopatra" in Italy, Mark Robson in England on "Nine Hours to Rama" and Darryl F. Zanuck in France on "The Longest Day."

Negotiations are under way for Jack Clayton, who produced and directed "The Innocents" to make another in England, but nothing has yet been decided, according to Levathes.

UPROOT 'DANGEREUSES' AT HENRY MILLER, N.Y.

The yanking of Astor Pictures' French import, "Les Liaisons Dangereuses," from the Henry Miller Theatre in New York Saturday (27) came even more abruptly than the film trade had anticipated. Pic had just completed its sixth week in a three-a-day, reserved seat engagement which originally had been expected to go for at least three or four months.

Official explanation of the move is that the Miller management felt that if it wanted to get a legit show in before close of the season, it had to have theatre clear by Feb. 1. The legit "Caretaker" moves from the Lyceum into the house for a four-week stint Feb. 25.

L.A. Biz Brisk; 'Devil' Torrid $30,000, 'Raft' Modest 12G; 'Song' Sock 20G, 6th; 'Story' Big 25G; 'Kings' $11,600

Los Angeles, Jan. 30.

Firstruns continue on bright side this week, some spots being almost the same as a week ago. Trade is being sparked by "Devil at 4 O'Clock," hotsy $30,000 in first general release at four theatres, plus a flock of potent holdovers. The other two newies are only fair, "George Raft Story" being especially disappointing in two locations.

"Flower Drum Song" should do a sock $20,000 in sixth session at Warner Hollywood to head up regular holdovers. "Majority of One" looks solid in fifth at Village.

"Lover Come Back" shapes strong $12,000 in sixth Warner Beverly. "Breakfast at Tiffany's" is rated nice in third at Vogue, and first at Loyola. "One, Two, Three" still is snappy in seventh.

Among hardticket films, "West Side Story" is getting the biggest coin total in sixth stanza at Chinese. "Judgment at Nuremberg" is rated lush in sixth at Pantages.

'Ship' Passable $8,000, Seattle; 'Song' 6G, 6th

Seattle, Jan. 30.

Very little exciting here this stanza with most of new entries not getting very far. Best of these is "Sail Crooked Ship," which looks good at Fifth Avenue. "One, Two, Three" is nice in second at Music Box. "Hey, Let's Twist" is very dull in five days at Paramount, opening round. "Flight of Lost Balloon" shapes barely okay in Coliseum. "Flower Drum Song" looms nice in sixth at the Music Hall.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (739; $1.50-$3.50) — "King of Kings" (M-G) (6th wk). Steady $6,000. Last week, $7,600.

Coliseum (Fox-Evergreen) (1,870; $1-$1.50)—"Flight of Lost Balloon" (FF) and "Day Sky Exploded" (FF). Barely okay $6,500. Last week, "Raft Story" and "20 plus 2" (AA), $5,800.

Fifth Avenue (Fox-Evergreen) (2,500; $1-$1.50)—"Sail Crooked Ship" (Col) and "Siege of Sidney St." (Indie). Passable $8,000. Last week, "Bachelor Flat" (20th) and "Madison Ave." (20th), $5,200.

Music Box (Hamrick) (738; $1-$1.50)—"One, Two, Three" (UA) (2d wk). Good $5,500. Last week, $6,400.

'Night' Fast 10G, Mpls.; 'Song' 7G, 6

Minneapolis, Jan. 30.

"Tender Is Night" is finding itself in the boxoffice driver's seat with a considerable advantage patronagewise. It shapes brisk at the State. "Sail A Crooked Ship" looms neat in second round at Lyric. Two of the wholesale holdovers, "Flower Drum Song" and "Pocketful of Miracles," are in their sixth week, former being especially sturdy at the Mann. "Search for Paradise" in third round is tasty. A few days sans below-zero temperatures helped things along for everybody.

Estimates for This Week

Avalon (Frank) (800; $1)—"Not Tonight, Henry" (Indie) (5th wk). Good $1,800. Last week, $2,000.

Century (Cinerama, Inc.) (1,100; $1.75-$2.65)—"Search for Paradise" (Cinerama) (reissue) (3d wk). Lofty $9,500. Last week, $8,000.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; $1-$1.25)—"Pocketful of Miracles" (UA) (6th wk). Mild $3,000. Last week, $4,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; $1-$1.25) — "Sail Crooked Ship" (Col) (2d wk). Ernie Kovac's cast presence bringing them in. Neat $7,500. Last week, $8,000.

Mann (Mann) (1,000; $1.25-$1.50)—"Flower Drum Song" (U) (6th wk). Still sturdy at $7,000. Last week, $7,500.

Orpheum (Mann) (2,800; $1-$1.25)—"Picnic" (Col) and "Twinkle and Shine" (Col) (reissues). Opened Monday (29) and continues until Friday (2) when "Mysterious Island" (Col) comes in. Last week, legit show.

St. Louis Park (Field) (1,000; $1.50)—"One, Two, Three" (UA) (6th wk). Holds up nicely at $4,500. Last week, $3,500.

State (Par) (2,200; $1-$1.25) — "Tender Is Night" (20th). Brisk with $10,000. Last week, "George Raft Story" (AA), $7,000.

Suburban World (Mann) (800; $1.25)—"The Bridge" (AA) (2d wk). Sturdy $2,000. Last week, $3,000.

Uptown (Field) (1,000; $1.25)—"Devil's Eye" (Janus) (2d wk). Good with $3,000. Last week, $2,000.

World (Mann) (400; $1.25-$1.50)—"Summer and Smoke" (Par) (2d wk). Pleasing $5,000. Last week, $6,000.

'Ship' Sturdy $7,000, Port.; 'Song' Big 6G, 6th

Portland, Ore., Jan. 30.

Firstrun biz continues spotty but some newies are doing well. "Sail Crooked Ship" is top newcomer, fancy at Fox. "This Is Cinerama" moves into 10th hefty session at Hollywood. "Flower Drum Song" still is lusty in sixth at the Broadway. "One, Two, Three" looms on disappointing side in first at Orpheum.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,890; $1-$1.50)—"Flower Drum Song" (U) (6th wk). Lusty $6,000 or better. Last week, $6,100.

Fine Arts (Foster) (426; $1-$1.50)—"Cold Wind In August" (Indie) and "St. Trinian's" (Indie). Fine $3,000 or near. Last week, "La Dolce Vita" (Astor) (11th wk) (m.o.), $2,600 on popscale.

Fox (Evergreen) (1,600; $1-$1.49)—"Sail Crooked Ship" (Col) and "Loss of Innocence" (Col). Fast $7,000 or over. Last week, "Bachelor Flat" (20th) and "Madison Ave" (20th), $6,300.

Guild (Rosener) (400; $1-$1.50)

Letup in Severe Cold Boosts Chi; 'Flat' Good $20,000; 'El Cid' Stout 16G, 'Song' Sock 26G, '2d Time' 18G

Chicago, Jan. 30.

A slight letup in the frigid weather has helped some to thaw Main Stem biz this round. Only opener making a substantial impact is "Bachelor Flat," which shapes a hot $20,000 first round at the State-Lake. "Cold Wind In August" is bowing to a good take at the Carnegie. Monroe tandem of "Secrets of Women" and "Man Who Wouldn't Talk" rates only fair.

"Cinerama Holiday" is pulling a solid second session at the Palace. Same stanza of "Second Time Around" is brisk at Roosevelt. "Innocents" is notching a tidy third lap at the Woods. Third and final stanza of "Rocco and Brothers" is fairish at World.

Fifth canto of "Summer and Smoke" shapes good at the Esquire. "The Mark" is sturdy in Surf fifth.

"Flower Drum Song" is the brightest of the holdovers, heading for great sixth session at the Chicago. "Question 7" continues potent in Loop sixth week. "One, Two, Three" is firm, also in sixth at United Artists.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (Telem't) (495; $1.25-$1.80)—"Cold Wind In August" (Indie). Warm $4,500. Last week, "From Roman Balcony" (Cont) $3,500.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 90-$1.80) "Flower Drum Song" (U) (6th wk). Great $26,000 or near. Last week, $25,500.

Cinestage (Todd) (1,038; $1.75-$3.50)—"El Cid" (AA) (6th wk). Stout $16,000. Last week, $13,000.

Cinema (Stern) (500; $1.50)—"Aida" (Indie) (reissue). Trim $3,500. Last week, "Call Me Genius" (Cont) (4th wk), $3,100.

Esquire (H&E Balaban) (1,350; $1.25-$1.80) — "Summer and Smoke" (Par) (5th wk). Good $6,000. Last week, $7,000.

Loop (Telem't) (606; $1.25-$1.80) —"Question 7" (Indie) (6th wk). Excellent $11,000. Last week, $13,300.

Monroe (Jovan) (1,000; 65-90)—

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include U. S. amusement tax.

'Flat' Lively 10G, Philly; 'Song' 13G

Philadelphia, Jan. 30.

City is loaded with holdovers but biz is perking up a bit currently. One of few newcomers, "Bachelor Flat," shapes potent at the Viking. "Rocco and Brothers," at 499-seat World, looms strong on initial round.

Best of regular holdovers is "Flower Drum Song," bangup in sixth session at Stanley. "King of Kings" is picking up over last week. "Pocketful of Miracles" shapes solid in sixth at Fox, same as last week. "West Side Story" looms smash in 12th stanza at Midtown, same as a week ago. "One, Two, Three" shapes hep in sixth at Randolph, getting same as fifth round.

Holdovers Bop B'way Biz But 'View' Wow 53G; 'Brava' Big 25G, 'One, Two' Rousing 41G, 'Night' Tender 46G, 2d

Broadway firstrun film business is more or less coasting as many theatres prepare to open fresh fare in the next seven days. The few newcomers shape remarkably strong. And most of the stronger pix are being helped by the Regents exams which enabled many youngsters to attend matinees through last Friday.

Standout newcomer, "View From Bridge," which hit a wow $23,000 in first stanza at the arty Sutton, is heading for a smash $30,000 in first week at the DeMille, ending tomorrow (Thurs.). Film originally opened at the Sutton, but did so well it was brought into the DeMille a few days later. Figure at Sutton is best at that house since "Gigi." "La Notte Brava" hit a good $9,000 in opening session at the arty Normandie. It did a record $16,000 or close in first at the Rialto.

Biggest coin total is being racked up by "Majority of One" and stageshow at the Music Hall, where a lofty $140,000 is in prospect for the third round. Combo goes a fourth week.

"One, Two, Three" is pushing ahead of last week's totals, with a great $41,000 likely for sixth session, daydating the Astor and Fine Arts. "Tender Is Night" looks to hit a nice $46,000 in second stanzas, daydating the Paramount and Plaza.

"Judgment at Nuremberg" is hitting a capacity figure of $38,000 in sixth week. "West Side Story" is pushing up to capacity again at $47,000 in 15th round at the Rivoli. "Pocketful of Miracles" held with fair $16,500 in sixth stanza daydating the Victoria and Trans-Lux 52d St. Latter house opens "Outsider" on Feb. 7 while the Vic launches "Light in Piazza" on same date.

"Sergeants Three" opens Saturday (3) at Capitol. "Sail a Crooked Ship" tees off Friday (2) at Criterion and 72d St. Playhouse. "The Victim" opens Feb. 5 at Murray Hill and Forum.

"Les Liaisons Dangereuses," which fell sharply in final two weeks, wound at the Henry Miller with a light $9,500 for sixth stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,094; 75-$2)—"One, Two, Three" (UA) (6th wk). This session winding today (Wed.) is heading for great $26,000 or near after $24,000 for fifth week. Holding.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50) "Roman Spring" (WB) (5th wk). This week ending today (Wed.) looks like slow $16,000. Holds a couple of extra days to open "Sergeants Three" (UA) on Saturday (3). Fourth was $19,500.

Criterion (Moss) (1,520; $1.25-$2.50) — "Innocents" (20th) (6th-final wk). Fifth stanza completed Sunday (28) was fair $13,600 after $13,000 for fourth week. Only stays through next Thursday (1), with "Sail Crooked Ship" (Col) due in on Friday (2), daydating with 72d St. Playhouse.

DeMille (Reade) (1,463; 90-$2.75) —"View From Bridge" (Cont). First week ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks like sock $30,000. Holds. Pic opened a few days earlier at arty Sutton, first week ending there last Sunday (28). First week here is topping opening round of "Summer and Smoke" (Par), and close to the top mark here outside of hardticket "Spartacus" (U).

Embassy (Guild Enterprises) (500; $1.50-$2.50)—"La Dolce Vita" (Astor) (8th wk). Seventh round completed yesterday (Tues.) is pushing to smash $19,000 and ahead of the $17,000 for sixth week. Daydating with Beekman.

Palace (RKO) (1,642; $1.50-$3.50) —"Judgment at Nuremberg" (UA) (7th wk). Sixth week completed last night (Tues.) was capacity $38,000, with added student matinee. Fifth week was $37,000, also capacity.

Forum (Moss) (813; 90-$1.80) — "Bachelor Flat" (20th) (3d wk). This week of 10 days, winding up next Sunday (4), looks like fair $15,000 after $9,200 for second week of seven days. "Victim" (Indie) opens Feb. 5, daydating with Murray Hill.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,665; $1-$2)—"Tender Is Night" (20th) (2d wk). This stanza winding tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to hold with good $31,000 after $40,000 for opener. Holds.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 90-$2.75)—"Majority of One" (WB) and stageshow (3d wk). This session finishing up today (Wed.) is heading for lofty $140,000 after $142,000 in second week. Stays, with "Lover Come Back" (U) due in Feb. 8.

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; $1.50-$3.50) —"West Side Story" (UA) (15th wk). This stanza ending today (Wed.) is heading for capacity $47,000 after $46,000 for 14th week. Continues indef.

Rialto (Brandt) (510; $1.25)—"La Notte Brava" (Indie) (2d wk). First stanza ended yesterday (Tues.) was record $16,000 or near. Money is possible via upped scale and grind policy. Daydating with the Normandie.

State (Lowe) (1,900; $1.50-$3.50) —"King of Kings" (M-G) (16th wk). This session winding today (Wed.)

Specs, Comedies, Suspense Pix Click At Paris 1st-Runs in Last 3 Years

Paris, Jan. 23.

A look at the films which that drew more than 200,000 patrons on their Paris firstruns in the three years ended last Dec. 31 gives an inkling of the type pix the French go for. Producers are studying the list and some may even go along with certain films accordingly. Spectacles, comedies and suspense items made up the bulk of the big gossers, with star names always a factor. Even some offbeaters did well.

Forty-six pix fell into this main group, 33 being French and majority coproductions. 11 Yank entries, one Italian and one Greek. Yank films mainly were in the spectacle, suspense and comedy categories via "Guns of Navarone" (Col), "Ben-Hur" (M-G), "Solomon and Sheba" (UA), "Some Like it Hot" (UA), with Marilyn Monroe name a draw, "Goodbye Again" (UA), with name value in Ingrid Bergman; three Alfred Hitchcock thrillers, "North by North West," (M-G), "Vertigo" (Par) and "Psycho" (Par), "Exodus" (UA), "Spartacus" (U) and "Alamo" (UA).

French star Jean Gabin had a record seven pix on this list, Brigitte Bardot four and Fernandel one. Three French swashbucklers were listed as well some big scale costumers. The French comedy by Robert Dhery, "Le Belle Americaine" also showed up in the listings.

But studying the list, it appears difficult to know exactly why these hit and others of the same ilk did not.

Most agree there is really not much new under the sun and many of the same style pix are still coining money the same as they did in silent days.

'The Trap,' French Play, Modern Stage Favorite In W. Germany, '60-'61

Frankfurt, Jan. 23.

The most popular modern play on the German-speaking stages (Germany, Switzerland, East Germany and Austria) in the 1960-61 season was "Die Falle" (The Trap), by French playwright Robert Thomas, a study here reveals. This criminal drama ran for 602 performances on 22 stages although the East Germans did not show it once. Most popular play in East Germany was "3X Klingeln" (Ring Three Times) by Hans-Dieter Schmidt, but this production ranked only seventeenth for all the German-lingo stages during the same period.

Other favorite authors were Shakespeare, who rated 2,563 performances on 120 stages; Lessing, with 1,436 shows on 62 stages; Goethe with 1,396 on 77 stages; and the controversial plays of the late left-wing playwright Berthold Brecht, which accounted for 1,249 performances on 77 stages.

There are 240 German-language theatres included in the study of the several countries.

Favorite operas were by Verdi, who scored 2,146 performances; Mozart, with 1,900; 1,531 from Puccini and 920 from Wagner. Russian composers took the lead in ballet, for 278 performances. Johann Strauss proved the favorite German-lingo operettist, with 2,000 productions, followed by Lekar, Walman and Offenbach.

Mex Readying Major Bid for Russo Mart

Mexico City, Jan. 30.

Mexico is readying a major bid for the Russian market via greater exchange of films. While in the past the Commie market has been virtually non-existent for Mexican pix, there has been a slight build-up in the past year or two. Now Russia imports around four or five pictures a year, and, most important, pays an average of $18,000 per picture.

Mexican film executives and officials would like a substantial hike in annual take from Russia, now averaging around $100,000 annually, as compared to under $30,000 a few years back when the Reds were cool to Mexican product.

MELBOURNE FESTIVAL

Will Present 'St. Joan' 'J. B.' and 'Volpone'

Melbourne, Jan. 23.

The second Adelaide Festival of Arts, March 17-31, is building up into another Edinburgh Fest, with opera, drama, ballet, art and other exhibitions running simultaneously.

The four official dramas are Shaw's "St. Joan," for which Aussie actress Zoe Caldwell will return the Down Under preems of Archibald MacLeish's "J.B.", and Benjamin Britten's "Noah's Flood" and the in-the-round production of Ben Johnson's "Volpone." On the musical side, Sir Malcolm Sargent and John Pritchard are coming out to conduct the London Philharmonic while Yehudi and Hepzibah Menuhin also will be there.

Teenagers Help Bolster Biz at Aussie Cinema

Sydney, Jan. 23.

Initial two weeks of 1962 has seen a major swingback to films, with the SRO sign outside the keyers, indicating that this year will be a real boxoffice boomer as top product continues to flow in. The VARIETY survey disclosed the fact—all-important to showmen—that the teenagers are buying cinema fare in ever-increasing numbers, not only in the major key houses but in the suburbs also, as witness the sellout trade currently being recorded by "Blue Hawaii" (Par).

Current hit of the city on hardticket is "Sundowners" (WB). This one is pulling payeees in the all-age group. "Come September" (U) bowed in Jan. 12 to a sellout on four-a-day and looks to return Universal a record take.

"Hey, Let's Twist" (Par) dualed with "Ladies Man" (Par) is another big draw with the teenagers. Mopet biz is powerful with "Swiss Family Robinson" (BV) and "Mysterious Island" (Col). Femme patrons are coming out for "Return to Peyton Place," (20th) "King of Kings", (M-G), "Leda" (Blake) and "Woman of Rome" (Blake).

There's still plenty of boxoffice life in "South Pacific" (20th), 159th week; "Spartacus" (U), 57th week; "Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama), 27th week, and "Oklahoma" (20th), ninth week.

Mex Distrib Chief OK's 'Alliance for Progres'

Mexico City, Jan. 23.

Mexican picture exploitation in Latin America will have direct favorable repercussions as an outcome of the "Alliance For Progress" program in the opinion of Juan Bandera Molina, head of the Peliculas Mexicanas distributorship.

Highly optimistic again, Molina, who heads the weakest link in the official distributorship setup, intimated that its financial problems are about over. There is to be a federal loan. The policy of handling foreign product in addition to Mexican in the Latin American market is producing revenue, and public is again showing awakened interest in the Republic's product, especially the better-made pictures.

The injection of economic aid via the Alliance program is expected to be highly beneficial for the Mexican industry, Molina said. He stated that Latin America as never before in the past, is poised on the brink of a major upward economic push which will be shared by the film industry.

Molina is satisfied with a reversal of the trend for Mexican pictures in this area in the last few months. Mexican distribution is picking up, boxoffice returns are on the rise, Molina said. He based this new interest in national films as outcome of injection of quality.

Spain Spurs Shorts

Madrid, Jan. 23.

Spanish film officialdom has taken another step to encourage production of short subjects and documentary films. An annual award of 150,000 pesetas ($2,500) will go to each of two documentaries on Spanish art and monumental treasures in one designated category or Spanish cultural, social or industrial themes.

As previously reported, film officials are expected to enact obligatory programming of shorts and documentaries.

9 New Parisian Legit Entries, 'Crabs' A Hit

Paris, Jan. 30.

Jean Anouilh started out the new year in the '61-'62 legit season with a hit via his wordy but clever "Le Foire D'Empoigne" (Up for Grabs) at the Comedie Des Champs-Elysees. Nine other new legiters are opening around town but the theatre seems more quantitative than qualitative this year.

Vieux-Colombier has a thematic piece, "Les Temoins" (The Witnesses), taking place in some Eastern Bloc country where a rehabilitated writer comes back after 20 years in prison. More didactic than theatrical this has a worthy outlook but appears limited.

This week will see "Flora" launched at the Varietes with Melina Mercouri and Jean-Pierre Aumont. It is directed by Jules Dassin. This Italo comedy-drama deals with an affair between two married people.

Theatre Lutece has an offbeat play by Guy Dumur, "Scenes" which concerns a grandmother jealous of the attention given her grandchildren. Jean Roncoroni's "Les Temps Des Cerises" (Springtime) bows at the Theatre Oeuvre.

Theatre Noueveautes brings in 2 morality comedies by Jean Marsan, "Les Foches," concerning two married women carrying on with the best friends of their husbands. Comedie De Paris has a musical comedy based on the Yank silent serial film star, Pearl White. It's called "Les Exploits De Pearl White." J. P. Ferriere did the book and Ricet-Barrier the lyrics and music.

"Axel" by Villiers De L'Isle Adam is a macabre thriller due at the Studio Des Champs-Elysees while Felicien Marceau's "Les Cailloux" (The Pebbles) is the Theatre Atelier's next entry. It concerns Paris highlife upset by a lovely American adventuress passing herself off as a millionairess.

Francois Billetdoux's "Tchin Tchin," about an alcoholic couple, gets a reprise at the Theatre Moderne, with Betsy Blair essaying her first French theatrical role opposite pic star Daniel Gelin.

Comedie-Francaise, Theatre National Populaire and the Odeon-Theatre De France are all planning last seasonal entries. All are government subsidized.

SPAIN'S THEATREMEN RALLY VS. TAXING

Madrid, Jan. 30.

Exhibitors throughout Spain are meeting in provincial assemblies to resist an increase of a special tax to swell funds for film subsidies and aid to the Spanish theatre.

Special tax, created in 1958 as a contribution from filmgoers, eventually became a 1.8% box office bite paid out of exhib pockets which amounted to a subsidy fund to the tune of 40,000,000 pesetas a year. Under the new ruling, exhibs will be compelled to pay 3.5%, and in some cases a flat 5% of box office receipts. Unable to increase box office prices, frozen since 1956, salle owners absorbed the original tax bite in the hope that their heavy tax load would eventually be consolidated and lightened.

On top of government failure to provide tax relief or unfreeze price scales, finance ministry has poured salt on exhib wounds by doubling the film fund tax.

International Sound Track

London

"All Night Long" appropriately being launched with a midnight preem at the Odeon, Leicester Square, tomorrow (Thurs.). The Rank release, produced by Bob Roberts, features top names in jazz, and stars Patrick McGoohan, Keith Michell and Richard Attenborough. . . . Hammer Films has cast Edward de Souza for the romantic lead opposite Heather Sears in "Phantom of the Opera." Film, which Anthony Hinds is producing for Universal release, is being directed by Terence Fisher . . . Sidney J. Furie, director of "The Young Ones," which is currently on record-breaking release in the London area, is to produce and direct "The Boys" for Gala Film Distribs. Richard Todd and Robert Morley will star, with guest appearances by Arthur Haynes and Harry Fowler. Title parts will be played by Jess Conrad, Dudley Sutton, Tony Garnett and Ronald Lacey . . . Rank Organization, which is releasing "El Cid" in Britain, is also to distribute the Sam Bronston opus in Germany and Austria . . . Rank, by the way, has also made a deal with Bronston for his projected "55 Days to Pekin," which is due to go into early production in Madrid with Nicholas Ray directing and Charlton Heston starred. In addition to British distribution, the opus will also be released through Rank in Germany, Autsria, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Latin America and throughout the Far East, excluding Japan.

London Management, the agency headed by Denis Van Thal, has closed a deal with William Heinemann the publishers, under which LM will handle all film, dramatic and tv rights in Heinemann publications which they themselves control. Among films made recently from the Heinemann list are "101 Dalmatians," "The Devil at 4 O'Clock," "Our Man in Havana" and "On the Beach."

Paris

Zbiginew Zybulski, a kind of Polish James Dean, says he developed his acting style after seeing the latter in Nick Ray's "Rebel Without a Cause" (WB) on a trip to Paris some years ago. He recently completed a role in a French pic "The Poll" in which he played a revolutionary in a mythical Latino country. He says he has passed his Dean phase and may go in for romantic roles after getting famous in the pic "Ashes and Diamonds" in which he played a shuffling, tortured, violent also Dean-like character . . . . Though Paris houses far less Yank films than Rome, many U.S. pic people are slowly making it their European headquarters and settling down here, or at least buying houses or apartments. Most like Paris for work and living but prefer Rome for sun and relaxation, and besides it is cheaper. Anatole Litvak, Jules Dassin and John Berry are oldtime Parisians as ditto actress Betsy Blair now doing a French play. Yul Brynner has bought a house and Anthony Perkins an apartment as well as Jean Seberg who has been in many French films. Darryl Zanuck is now rooted here as is Olivia De Havilland and writer Irwin Shaw. Add Claire Bloom and Rod Steiger.

Sidney Chaplin always comes back after chores in the U.S. Eddie Constantine who became a pic and singing star here, and Gene Kelly, Ingrid Bergman, Alan Jay Lerner, are other transplants. Nothing like Rome perhaps but growing. And that is not counting people like Sophia Loren, Anna Magnani and Curt Jurgens who spend a lot of time here.

Sophia Loren back with her New York Critic's Acting Award and continuing work in Anatole Litvak's thriller opposite Tony Perkins, Jean-Pierre Aumont and Gig Young. Film has "final" title, "Deadlock." In a self-written article in local fan mag Cinemonde, Simone Signoret opines that a good film is a miracle which depends on the work, talent and the love of 50 people. Actors have the biggest chance of benefiting from this miracle, says she.

Rome

Chet Baker's life story to be filmed by Alberto Lattuada for Documento Films, with start set for February . . . Baker was recently released from an Italian jail after serving time on a narcotics rap . . . Program spotlighting Italian films has reprised over Italy's RAI-TV network on weekly basis . . . 35 pix started shooting here between Dec. 20 and Jan. 10, six of them spectacles.

Feature to shoot on Sardinia's Emerald Coast may be the result of recent local huddles between the Karim Agha Khan and director Steve Previn, and should be followed by further talks between the Khan and Disney, for whom Previn starts "Escapade in Florence" this spring on Italo locations . . . Some $227,000 in subsidies were handed out during 1961 by the Italian government to aid 15 film festivals and exhibits held on the peninsula during the period . . . Venice Fest alone grabbed some $170,000 of the total . . . Two additional film events failed to get official aid . . . Franco Finzi, Rome attorney repping Carlo Ponti, Maleno Malenotti, and others, acquired pic rights to "Story of Alba Giubelli" for an un-named client . . . Story is based on real-life Italo event and is said to parallel that of "Daughter of Silence" Broadway dramatization of Morris West novel.

Mexico City

The Twist craze, which hit Mexico hard, will be theme of a Mexican film of producer Guillermo Calderon, titled "Al Son del Twist" with comic Manuel "Loco" Valdez, sexy drummer Lisa Rossell and a number of rock 'n' roll units. Picture has three week shooting schedule and Calderon will rush it to completion for early exploitation though long behind Paramount and Columbia twisters . . . Diana Theatre, latest here, slated for inaugural a month ago, had opening date set back to early February because of miscalculations in installation of giant screen which, it seems, was a foot longer than normal. House opens with a Hollywood spectacle, either Metro's "King of Kings" or Universal's "Spartacus" . . . Operadora de Teatros, federal circuit, nixed Mario Moreno (Cantinflas) petition to permit a 40c boxoffice for exploitation of "Pepe" in first run houses and gave similar thumbs down on proposal by comic's Posa Films company to reissue his oldie Mexican films at firstrun standard 32c . . . New policy of federally owned circuits, incidentally, is to give best exhibition dates to Mexican product, with this including all holidays and special weekends. This plan was initiated over recent Christmas-New Year's holidays when 186 of circuits 327 houses featured Mexican pictures.

Rumor, backed by insider report in Senate, is that a senatorial committee is going through reams of data submitted by Mexican producers, distributors and exhibitors arguing for a boxoffice increase, and favorable ruling may be expected officially soon with most logical price probably 40 to 48c for first runs, nd corresponding boosts down the line, as compared with current 32c admission freeze . . . This year's stanza, the fifth, for the World Review of Film Festivals, will concentrate on Acapulco and bypass screenings in this capital as in past. Miguel Aleman, National Tourist Council prexy collaborating closely with Jorge Ferretis in organization which has already begun to avoid last-minute rush and disorganization. Also there may be sizable coin spent for advertising event abroad, with plan not only to make this the "best" festival but to build up flow of national and foreign tourists to the port resort.

Mario Moreno (Cantinflas) begins shooting of his annual Mexican picture in February, with this titled "When Saint Peter Checks the Lists." Comic also hopes to star in a musical and he will also do his comic bullfight turn in Madrid for relief of Sevilla flood victims. Only other commitment is year-end appearance in London for his role in Hollywood production for which he signed some time ago . . . Producer Victor Stoloff, shooting "The Secret Garden," also has project for another Mexican picture late in February or early March, with this one

EXPLAINS THE PAIN IN SPAIN

Anti-Manana Film Showmen

Madrid, Jan. 16.

A model of long range planning, rare in the film industry here, was unfolded last week by As Productions. Its chiefs, Juan Couret and Ramon Llido, not only announced a complete 1962 production line-up with casts but named the four film directors who will handle these assignments during the next 12 months.

First of the four, "Un Grano do Mostaza" (Mustard Seed), is a comedy which Jose Luis Saenz will start directing this month with a cast that includes Manolo Gomez Bur, Rafael Alonso, stage star Ampero Soler Leal and Gracita Morales in cooperation with Tarfe Film. Subsequently, Jose Maria Forque will direct "Accident No. 703," based on a screenplay by Pedro Maso, Vincente Coello and Forque to star Nuria Torray, Susana Campos, Jose Luis Lopez Vazquez, Julia Caba and Argentine's Carlos Estrada.

Catalan director, Julio Coll, will follow with "Rehearsal for Murder" with Hans Messemer, Eva Bartok and Antonio Prieto heading the cast in a coproduction As Films—Eco Films. And rounding out the '62 schedule is a light comedy, "St. Valentine Is Back," which Fernando Palacio will direct with a cast starring Jorge Rigaud (in his second turn as St. Valentine), comic Cassen, Ampero Soler Leal and Lopez Vazquez.

Choice of film directors and cast, together with the novelty of pinpointing a production program through the calendar year, received surprised approval in Spanish film circles.

See Yank 'Rebels' Softening Position On Dictate of Spanish Officials

Madrid, Jan. 30.

One of the three American companies to repudiate the Spanish-Motion Picture Export Assn. agreement last month, notified government officials it was denouncing its denunciation, while a second is expected to follow suit momentarily.

In a letter dated Dec. 9, MPEA Mediterranean director, Leo Hochstetter, advised Spanish film authorities that 20th Fox, Paramount and Warner Bros. refused to go along with renewal of the agreement, but that Allied Artists, Disney, M-G-M, United Artists and Universal would go along with the old pact for another year. Columbia's acceptance, Hochstetter wrote, was dependent on assurances the company would receive a supplementary import license.

After the letter was received by the director general of cinema, however, 20th-Fox had a change of heart and instructed its Barcelona representative, Petro Bistagne, to withdraw opposition. It's believed Warner Bros. will follow Fox in calling off its rebellious stand. This would leave Paramount as the sole opponent to the Spain MPEA agreement.

Government film circles are inclined to treat the Hochstetter letter as a tempest in a teapot and are at a loss to understand how the 1961-62 film agreement could be rejected when all of the Yank companies have already received their allocation of the American film quota and, in some instances, are already exploiting their film imports.

Official quarters, film sources say, are convinced the allocation point system, ingeniously devised by and for the Spanish Distributors Assn., is the only logical arrangement for meting out import licenses within the industry. These sources say the government looks forward to further negotiations with MPEA on quotas but entertains no intention to eliminate or modify the baremo system — at least in the foreseeable future. These circles are more optimistic regarding a possible increase in the annual import quota for U. S. films.

Despite trade reports that the government had sent Hochstetter a blistering reply, it was learned on good authority that government film officials did not consider the MPEA missive of sufficient importance to warrant an answer.

Free Cinema Bus Service

London, Jan. 30.

A free bus service to take the overflow from the Columbia Theatre in Shaftesbury Avenue to the Odeon, Marble Arch, has been inaugurated to cope with the demand for seats for the new Peter Sellers starrer, "Only Two Can Play," day-dating the two situations.

As the Columbia has a much smaller capacity, patrons are being taken by bus from Shaftesbury Avenue to Marble Arch.

Tony Hancock Sets Up Own Film Prod. Outfit

London, Jan. 30.

Tony Hancock, one of Britain's leading comedians, has formed his own production company and made a four-picture deal with Associated British. The contract signed last week supersedes his previous pact with ABPC under which he was committed to make several films for the studio on a starring-only basis.

First subject for Hancock's new company will be "The Punch and Judy Man," based on an original written by Hancock in collaboration with Philip Oakes. It will start rolling mid-March on location at an English resort. The star will not appear on tele until the picture is completed. His first major film, "The Rebel," released last spring, was one of the local top grossers in 1961.

French Exhibs Rename Edeline

Paris, Jan. 30.

Jean-Chalers Edeline has been re-elected prexy of the Federation of French Film Exhibitors. His opening statement reaffirmed a definite continuation of lobbying and pressures on the governmental film setup under the Ministry of Culture for detaxation which would give the sorely-pressed exhibs a needed lift. If not, he opined that many houses would shutter.

Edeline is content with the governmental 50% tax cut for small exhibs which goes into effect next April. This applies to houses getting about 1,200 patrons a week or the near-4,000 at hardtops in metropolitain areas. These account for about 15% of the national gross.

With a probable straight payment for film rentals coming up, Edeline feels that small exhib problems are fairly well on their way to a solution. However, he still thinks direct action is needed to get the crippling tax of 30% eased on the firstrun and subsequent run houses. To this end, he wants to tighten the operation committee of the FFFE for easier tactical decisions and work.

He affirmed that all members still will have a say through their representatives. Edeline's goal is a fairer tax to give exhibs a bigger cut on grosses which they lost when film aid was cut off to them in 1959 though continued for producers. He says that possibly strikes could be used if the oft-promised tax cut is not forthcoming soon.

SUEVOS IN HARD LOOK AT FILMS

By HANK WERBA

Madrid, Jan. 30.

"Far more help has been given to producers than to the films produced. This situation will be reversed and we will give our support to film product, not to the producers."

This dramatic formula is one among a number of sober remarks made by Director General for Cinema and Theatre, Jesus Suevos, in his 1962 prediction on how the Spanish film industry will shape up.

In his first specific pronouncement since he was named government film chief last May (to replace Munoz Fontan, overnight victim of Spanish victory at the Cannes Film Festival where "Varidiana" was awarded the Golden Palm), Suevos clearly went on record in favor of continuing generous state aid but strongly implied:

(1) that the 20-year-old policy of production grants and privileges has not established a solidly-rooted industry

(2) that despite a generous state film aid program, there has been no appreciable amelioration of quality

(3) that there is still no evidence of a national film distribution agency or company releasing Spanish pix in the world market—not

Catholics Ban More Pictures In W. Germany

Frankfurt, Jan. 23.

The Catholic Film Commission of West Germany has cracked down on more fulllength films than ever before, according to news from the Rottenburg Diocese.

Of 490 international films that the Catholic film service viewed last year, 59 of them or 12% of the entire lot, were not okayed for the church group. That was an increase from the 8.7% of turndowns which the church group made in 1960. And it has been a constantly increasing percentage of rejects since only 4% were banned in 1956.

Most of the pix that failed to meet the church standards were French films which got 17 rejects, followed by the Italian vehicles of which 12 were banned. Most of the others were local West German productions.

But the Catholic film censors also released a list of films that they considered worthy of viewing, there being 42 on this list, also a drop from the 60 given special citation the year previously. Highest number of the approved films came from America, there being 10; followed by seven specially-cited German productions, and four each from France, Italy and England.

Protest Formula for Forced Playoff of Spain's Native Product

Madrid, Jan. 30.

Film exhibs, in attempting to change the pattern of obligatory screen time, are asking for an annual time quota as a substitute for the present requirement forcing them to exhibit a certain number of Spanish films within a given number of weeks per year. Exhibitors' argument is that the quota by films often compels them to limit release of worthwhile native features in order to meet government quota requirements.

Exhib petition, presented by Saragossa circuit owner Filipe Sanz Briz to the Director General of Cinema was discussed and rejected by the Film Producers Assn. within the Sindicato Nacional del Espectaculo although no reasons for turndown were offered. Decision is now in the hands of Director General Jesus Suevos who is expected to incorporate this particular aspect of government film protection in a sweeping reshuffle of state film aid he has announced for the near future.

Name 'Whistle' British Entry at Mar del Plata

London, Jan. 30.

"Whistle Down the Wind," a Beaver production for Allied Film Makers, has been chosen by the joint industry selection committee as the official entry for the Mar del Plata Film Fest, March 21-31.

The pic, which is released through Pathe-America in the U. S. and by the Rank Organization in the remainder of the world, was produced by Richard Attenborough and directed by Bryan Forbes. It's based on a novel by Mary Hayley Bell, whose daughter Hayley Mills stars with Bernard Lee and Alan Bates.

Mex Crix Select 'Yanco' as Top Pic

Mexico City, Jan. 30.

By unanimous vote, the Mexican Assn. of Film Critics and Reporters selected "Yanco" as top picture of the year. This is the film that was experimentally made by producer-director Servando Gonzalez and cameraman Alex Phillips Jr. At first it had trouble receiving a union okay for general release because it was made with non-union elements. The association's "Cuauhtemoc" prize was awarded to Ismael Rodriguez as best producer of the year for "The Important Man."

Best actress award went to Maricruz Olivier for her work in "Teresa." Male star selected was Julio Aleman for his role in "Brothers of Iron." Most promising actress of the year was rated to be Patricia Conde for her part in same film.

Special diplomas also went to Servando Gonzales, for his direction of "Yanco"; to Luis Alcoriza for the direction of "The Youths"; Alfredo Crevena for his direction of "Teresa" and actor awards to David Silva for various film roles; Kitty de Hoyos for "Young Girl"; and Emilio "Indio" Fernandez for his role in "Brothers of Iron."

Film to Run Four Hours

Tokyo, Jan. 23.

Mitsugu Ohkura, prez of Ohkura Motion Picture Co., and former topper of now defunct Shintoho, will produce a 70m feature pic, "Emperor Meiji," with a budget of about $555,000. The historical picture will have four parts and will have some four hours running time.

Production is slated to begin next September and run through February. Project is presumably encouraged by success of Japan's first 70m effort, Dalei's "Sakya" (The Life of Buddha), a domestic smash.

Gun Play at Bar's Preem

Vienna, Jan. 23.

Galla opening of new bar in Hotel Scesaplana in Vorarlberg, Austria's most western province, ended tragically when Karl Hodina, pianist, shot and wounded his violinist, Paul Seipt.

Police claim that Hodina had been drinking. When the violinist ordered him to leave the bar, Hodina drew pistol. Physicians declared that there is a chance that Seipt may recover.

Berlin Actor 'Betrays' Colleagues

Wolfgang Neuss Startles German Public With Newspaper Ad Tipping Killer in TV Thriller

Berlin, Jan. 23.

What many Berliners called the season's poorest joke recently was carried out by Wolfgang Neuss, local cabaretist and screen actor. Neuss obviously disliked the marked success of the German tele series, "Das Halstuch" (The Scarf), a detective thriller by Francis Durbridge, which has kept millions of German televiewers at home and the cinemas here half-empty.

The day before the final segment (which was to reveal who's the killer) of "Halstuch" was telecast, Neuss took an ad in a Berlin boulevard paper which read along these lines: "Why all the trouble? Dieter Borsche is the killer. Don't stay at home—Go to the cinema on Wednesday night. Signed: A Film-fan (Comrade Muenchhausen)."

Neuss apparently not only had in mind to deal television a blow but also to make publicity for his next film, "Comrade Muenchhausen." Local papers were filled with readers' letters of protest the following days. They said "Fie, Herr Neuss!," called him "a mar-feast" and used all type of abusive words. A colleague of Neuss, Heinz Lausch wrote him an open letter which was printed in nearly all local dailies: "I know you keep on trying to show how funny you are. But I believe you haven't realized what you have done. With your selfish and egoistic see-I-know-something advertisement, you have spoiled the fun and excitement of many people. We know that only one thing would have prevented us from your silliness: If you'd have been a member of the cast . . ."

One thing is sure: Neuss has been responsible for the most substantial non-political January topic in Berlin. But did he expect such a negative (on the part of the public) outcome of his "Joke"? It may be added that not a few were unpleasantly surprised that a paper would print such an ad.

Israeli Govt. Policy Vs. Inviting German Artists to Country

Tel Aviv, Jan. 23.

Minister of Education and Culture, Abba Eban revealing the Israeli government's future policy on cultural ties with Germany, said that under new regulations, no German artists will be invited to Israel and Israeli artists will "not be encouraged" to perform in Germany. This is only a formal definition of a long-existing pattern. No German artist or musician ever has performed in Israel, only exception being Marlene Dietrich, whose anti-Nazi record is obvious. The Israeli government is in a position to regulate performances by foreigners through a "committee for artistic import."

On the other hand, the government has no power to prevent Israeli artists from appearing in Germany. But only a few of them did appear there in the past (film actress Dalia Levi, actor Zeev Berlinsky, Sami Molcho and a few others) because of personal feelings or because the Israeli public dislikes the idea.

As in the past, Israeli cinemas will show no pictures made in Germany, with a few exceptions of co-productions with other countries.

German-speaking pix are shown in Israeli theatres if made by Swiss or Austrian producers. (There were a few occasions when German pictures were shown, labeled as "Swiss" or "Austrian"). In such cases, the censorship board is screening the names of all participants in the picture, for ex-Nazis.

The Israeli Philharmonic has several times tried to let singers vocalize in German and some did so. But there is still strong reristance against it though no official restrictions. Only recently, the orch was under fire because it wanted to perform Beethoven's Ninth Symphony in German. It had to make a last-minute change into English.

NEW ANGLO ITALO PIX PACT COVERS SIX MOS.

London, Jan. 30.

A new Anglo-Italian film agreement, limited to the first half of the year to coincide with the extended life of the Italian Film Aid law, gives British producers 27 dubbing exemptions for the six months to next June 30, but the total for the year is not expected greatly to exceed 30.

A dubbing exemption costs the distributor $3,080, but the alternative would be a comulsory dubbing loan of 5,500,000 lire, equal to a little more than $9,000. That's the same rate as paid by American companies.

The previous pact spanned a 14-month period and allowed 42 exemptions, which may be better than the current agreement. The British negotiators, from the British Film Producers Association and the Federation of British Film Makers, had hoped to conclude a settlement for the full year. But that was frustrated by the Italian government's decision to postpone the introduction of its new film legislation for at least six months.

Arg. Exhibs Mull Closing; Protest Excessive Taxes

Buenos Aires, Jan. 23.

Argentine exhibitors once more are contemplating the shuttering of their houses in protest against excessive taxation which they allege makes film entertainment too costly for the local pocketbooks. Congress went into recess in December without having debated and approved amendments to the Film Law which would cut taxes. Certain sectors of exhibitor groups advocate a wait-and-see policy, hoping that the Extraordinary Session, called for this month, would deal promptly with this problem.

Meanwhile, producers are summoning forces to protest any cut in the tax which finances their filmmaking. Fernando Ayala, as President of DAC (Directores Argentinos Cinematograficos), issued a communique protesting against a draft law submitted to Congress to cut the 10% tax on admissions which yielded some $6,000,000 between Nov. 1, 1960 and Oct. 31, 1961. A high proportion of these funds are absorbed in the upkeep of the Screen Institute, apart from subsidizing production. The producers claim that any cut would result in paralyzing the industry and create unemployment among all those connected with it. This protest has the support of the Authors' Society (Argentores), Actors' Society (SADIC), Composers, Set Designers and SICA (Screen Industry Union.)

The fact remains that day after day, cinemas are shuttering and putting up for-sale placards, among them the Gran Florida, Jupiter and General Urquiza. The Province of Buenos Aires Exhibitor Assn. ascribes these closings to the dwindling audiences caused by excessive taxation.

In Cordoba City, the municipal authorities have applied even higher taxes since last Jan. 1, and exhibs shuttered in protest.

The Buenos Aires Province legislature voted a cut in the 10-permil Profit Tax on film theatres throughout that province. But this is the least of the many charges exhibitors must pay. And the measure does not satisfy them.

Exhibitors point out that in 1957 (when the Film Law was approved), attendance at Buenos Aires city cinemas reached 75,000,000 while in the first six months of last year the figure fell to 17,000,000. If attendance keeps at this pace in the second half of 1961, attendance will have dropped to half the 1957 figure.

Mexico's Pix Biz Hears Rumbles of Big Switch In Gov't. Film Activity

Mexico City, Jan. 30.

With the Mexican Senate adjourned until September, and definitive action postponed on the new Film Law in the closing sessions of last year, industry grapevine is buzzing with reports that a radical switch in official supervision of film activity is in the making. Learned that the inter-secretarial commission charged with devising a complete reconstruction of the industry, is veering to the creation of a National Motion Picture Committee. This permanent body would handle all aspects including financing, production, distribution and exhibition.

Before the committee can be formed, it will require approval by both Mexican legislative bodies, the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate. While no official source cares to make any comment, it appears that legislation legalizing the committee will be passed this year.

The high official source stressed that the new move is not nationalization of the industry, but a concentration of all phases into a central office for greater efficiency. Producers, exhibitors and distributors will still have a free hand.

Of course, the government already has a major stake in the industry via control of the Churubusco Studios, the official film distributorships and the major theatre circuit. But official holdings will not crimp the stlye of independents, whose efforts well be fostered and aided by the new centralized federal office, according to this source.

Pain In Spain

even in the Spanish-language sphere

(4) that past policy of liberal aid gave birth to promoters and speculators but not to bona fide film producers and

(5) that primary producer effort was directed at the film classification board rather than the moviegoing public or the film industry as a whole.

Suevos, in declaring his intention of radically overhauling the entire film aid policy, made it clear that encouragement to raise quality standards would be intensified. Producers need not fear if quality pix fail at the box office. Not only will they be protected financially but they will also receive special awards guaranteeing them legitimate profits. Film quality will no longer be looked on as a risk but as "a goal meriting our complete support."

Of equal importance is the Director General's aim to make all branches of the industry beneficiaries of the government's renovated film aid program. In the past, maximum aid was poured on producers while exhibs bore the brunt via compulsory screen time for Spanish product and box office taxes to swell production subsidy funds. Recognizing that exhibitors in many instances lost their shirts in forced screening of local product the public would not buy, the Director General promised that "all sectors of the film industry will be adequately favored when the new film policy goes into effect."

On the question of film import quota, the film chief stated that there would be no changes for the time being. He was not, however, adverse to future changes if conditions so warranted. He was more emphatic in his intention to maintain the status quo regarding the sindicato point system (baremo) under which the total quota of foreign licenses is allocated among all Spanish distributors (including MPEA member companies). "The present baremo," he said, "has a logical foundation but we are even prepared to make modifications if it can be demonstrated that this system does not work. However, we will only do so at the request of the Entertainment Sindicato." Immediate implication of the Director General's attitude is that it will bring no relief in the government's current film differences with the Motion Picture Export Assn. Although MPEA was not mentioned by name, the film chief's inference is that he will be unyielding in the face of Yank demands for scrapping of the baremo and for a special quota to augment the meagre allocation of import licenses to such companies as Paramount, Warner Bros., Columbia, 20th-Fox and Metro.

In practically the same breath, Suevos extended a warm welcome to foreign producers who, he said, "will receive our fullest cooperation in facilitating their needs to produce in Spain."

Film sources here are convinced that Suevos means business and that his New Year remarks will soon be amplified with a detailed reorganization of government film support and controls that could eventually transform home market film-making into a world market industry.

Inside Stuff—International

Italian TV-news onlookers are now getting a brighter and more varied fare than before and pompous Ministers of State inaugurating public works are getting less publicity breaks than they were accustomed to. This is due to the new editor of "Telegiornale" (as the TV news service is called) who brought about this change. Enzo Biagi editor of a national magazine, had in the past personally written its tv column, singing out for his special attention the news cast and their excessive devotion to stodgy official events. Since he is in his new post he is trying to show what he really intends to be good visual news. He has, indeed, pulled all the stops. Inauguration and speeches are mostly out, operators have orders to keep moving with their cameras and tape-recorders and jump unto anything unusual which makes a good news sequence. Ministers and authorities can get on the TV screen whenever they have really something important to say—otherwise they can stay home and join the audience.

It's a bold program—if elementary from a U. S. point of view. Though Italy's tv is not state controlled it is nevertheless state supervised and the temptation for authorities to throw their weight around in order to get onto the screen never dies — just as the politician who believes he is doing himself some good merely by being seen—will never fade away.

Shooting is set to start March 17 with the aim being a Christmas release. Gert Nickstadt and Hans Bowe are doing the script.

King Brothers (all three of them) busy preparing "Captain Sinbad," Arabian-Nights epic with a number of stunt novelties, cameras to start rolling at Geiselgasteig on Feb. 16; pic to mark a double debut of German warbler Heidi Bruhl, just back from a U.S. ???? an American film. Others cast are Pedro Armendariz, Guy Williams, James Dobson, the latter also doubling as production assistant and casting head; Byron Haskins directing, screenplay by Sam West. This will be followed, also at Geiselgasteig, by the next King Bros. production, "Mr. Adam," based on the Pat Frank novel.

New device meant to curtail moviemaking expenses by as much as 30% to its first practical test "Electronic Cam," the new device brought out by "Arri," Munich, will do both the job of a motion picture camera and a tv camera at the same time; while the end product is on film, each scene can be played back on tape immediately after the take; thus all the time and labor saving methods of video production (such as playing large passages through without interruption and taking them by three cameras from different angles) may be utilized without having to lose any of the artistic effect which only the fine cut of regular film is apt to attain.

Roger Lewis, As Hesitant Oracle, In High on Unballied 'Pawnbroker'

Perhaps the reason more good and worthwhile literary properties are not picked up for films is that the best of these properties at first glance seldom seem "commercial," especially if they are off the beaten track in any respect. Roger H. Lewis, former ad-pub and exploitation veep of United Artists who is now about to make his debut as an indie producer, made this tentative suggestion in New York last week in commenting on his forthcoming film version of "The Pawnbroker," a critically (if not especially commercially) successful novel by Edward Lewis Wallant.

Lewis emphasized his "tentativeness," explaining that having been an ad-pub man for so many years, and having helped obtain headlines for all-embracing pronouncements by some fatuous industry figures, he was a little reluctant to make statements which, in print, would appear equally sweeping and oracular. However, he pulled himself together and continued:

You have to live with a property for a while before you can see its screen potential, he said. There's such an abundance of material being peddled that it obviously isn't possible to take the time necessary to consider the full potential of each one. Major company readers have to go through bundles of stuff every week, and thus it's something of a miracle when a property that is out of the ordinary is spotted for what it might be in the totally different film medium.

"The Pawnbroker," the story of the spiritual redemption of a former inmate of a concentration camp, was read and turned down by just about everybody in Hollywood when Lewis came upon it. It grew upon him and he decided to take the big chance. Picture is going to be made in England and budgeted at between $350,000 and $400,000—that is, at a price which will enable it to "pay off in specialized houses, and then if it busts out into the commercial houses, all's well and good." But he doesn't want to be "committed" to commercial house acceptance from the start. "It's not that sort of property."

The announcement that he and his partner, Philip Langner, are going to shift the Harlem locale of the novel to London's Soho, raised a few questions anent so-called runaway production. Lewis answered these in two parts. First by saying that both he and the author felt that the opportunities for developing the atmosphere of the story would be better in Soho than Harlem, pointing out too that if he were insistent upon making a film in England "no matter what," he would not necessarily seek a property that could be more authentically done in Harlem.

Secondly (and frankly) he acknowledged that coproduction and Eady subsidy benefits were such that he could not afford to do the picture here even if he wanted to. However, if financing were the only reason he was going to England, he certainly would not have picked an inappropriate work with which to cross the Atlantic. He leaves for England in a couple of weeks to line up a British screenwriter.

The fact that his first pic is definitely aimed at the "specialized" theatres, does not necessarily mean that Lewis will be confining himself to this genre in the future. He says he has a couple of exploitation picture ideas perking, and that he wants to be involved in all types of production. Using a favorite phrase of his former boss, Max Youngstein, he commented that "this is a carnival business, after all."

Raising the "front money" on "The Pawnbroker" was difficult, he reported, but now that he's got that, everything seems to be coming up roses. Several distribs, including a couple of majors, are interested. When he was scrounging around trying to get the front money—with which to acquire the property and prepare a treatment, he said he was sorely tempted to use his own dough ("it really wasn't that much"). But he decided he was in this business as a full-time pro, and if he weren't a good enough salesman to get someone else interested enough to join him in the project, then he'd better get out of the business. This is where Langner came in.

The former ad-pub exec is maintaining his ad-pub enthusiasm: the production situation today is tremendously exciting and full of opportunities. And, in a burst of candor: "If I don't make it, it's my own damned fault."

On 'Carpetbaggers' Levine Shoots Big

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Not only will Joe E. Levine produce "The Carpetbaggers" for Embassy Pictures "but it will be one of the most expensive pictures ever made in Hollywood," he declared just before emplaning for Gotham Friday.

"I will spend at least $5,000,000 on it," Levine revealed. Although he hasn't yet signed director, writer or stars, he promised "they will be tops. Additionally the way I will produce it will make Hollywood look awfully good. There are a few words in the book which naturally will be omitted."

Asked, "How many pictures do you plan to make this year?" Levine quipped, "I'm sorry you reminded me. I really don't know."

'Follow That Man' In Sans Any Publicity Aides

Denver, Jan. 30.

Vogue Art theatre here will have the first American showing of the Lopert production "Follow That Man," a comedy filmed in Great Britain and starring Sid Chaplin (Charlie's son) and Don Addams.

As there are no ads, press book or publicity material available for the American release of the film, Bill Ramsey, manager of the Vogue, has been given the assignment of preparing all copy, layouts and press notices for the showing Feb. 15 and his campaign will be used in subsequent releases of the film throughout the U.S., according to Ramsey.

that it affirms the boxoffice plateau spanning the past four years —last year's trade being a little under '59 but a little ahead of '58.

As for receipts, Sindlinger estimates the '61 total at $1,485,336,000, compared to the previous year's $1,456,739,000. Takes are calculated on the basis of a 68.5 cent average admission.

There's a consoling point made by Sindlinger that biz last year would have risen higher if not for the beating boxoffices took from the weather last February, when grosses fell 19% under the previous February.

Report also indicates a leveling off in the trend of recent years to drive-in business. Of total adult paid attendance last year, 32.7% was accounted by ozoners, compared with 33% in 1960.

Spyros Skouras Set For KayCee Show-a-Rama; Goal 800 Attendance

Kansas City, Jan. 30.

Spyros P. Skouras, president of 20th Century-Fox Pictures, will be the keynote speaker for the United Theatre Owners "Show-A-Rama V" to be held here March 6-8. Details of the annual convention are now shaping up, following a meeting of directors last week.

Convention aims to break all attendance records, according to Richard H. Orear, its president and also head of Commonwealth Theatres. Attendance of 800 is the goal, with a membership from seven states. Last year's attendance was in the 700-bracket for the first time in the history of exhib meetings here.

As with recent "Show-A-Ramas," this one will have an extensive trade show in connection, all sessions and exhibits being at the Hotel Continental, also the scene of other exhib conventions in recent years. Basic theme is to be "An Old Fashioned Showmanship Revival," and this will be highlighted in the Tuesday afternoon session with a clinic presented by Dr. Herbert True and Fred Klemp, consultants in the field.

Intellectual Pitch

word-of-mouth to assist an uncertain boxoffice bet, especially at launching, which often foreshadows the ultimate b.o. prowess. If an otherwise good film can be enhanced at the wickets in the initial firstruns by impressive pre-release excitement, feeling of sales execs is that generally the pic will then take care of itself in resultant snowballing of bookings and business.

At present time U is concentrating the screenings in Gotham and Washington as buildup for the preem date in early March at the Victoria, N.Y. Screening sked, however, will expand as other keys are booked.

It's understood the exhibitor (mostly circuits) reaction so far has been a "yes, but—" response. "Earth" has no names of particular consequence to the U.S. market, unlike Stanley Kramer's money-making "On the Beach," which also dealt with subject of nuclear disaster. This, natch, is one reason Universal is making with the heavy screening sked; but company moguls are also convinced there is more public awareness today of the nuclear peril than when "Beach" bowed, a contention that equates in their view with receptivity.

All this, to be sure, is what the predicament at Universal is all about. Film's general release is pencilled for May, but the playoff pattern likely won't jell until the preem date in early March at the Victoria, N.Y. Screening sked, however, will expand as other keys are booked.

Film's general release is pencilled for May, but the playoff pattern likely won't jell until the returns are in on the Broadway kickoff. Pending reaction—which the advance screenings are designed to influence in no small way—U will handle the pic either as an exploitationer, with stress on saturation runs, or as a more specialized entry. If the latter, there's the possibility it may even nail some art house dates, but this would be influenced to some degree by the reception of the key Manhattan-based critics.

Involuted And High-Faluted

[MEANING JOE E. LEVINE]

Joe E. Levine, as demonstrated the other weekend, is attuned to the exploitation of his own exploitation. This alludes to the Duffy Square (Broadway) premiere of a three-panel display for "Boccaccio 70," the activation of which had a glamor assist from star Sophia Loren, prime purpose of whose Manhattan quickie was to pick up her N. Y. Film Critics' award for "Two Women." That, too, is an Embassy (Levine) release.

Stunt inspired a hep press (wire service, photogs included) turnout, but figures more importantly on a television trump to come. Seems, coincidentally, that Miss Loren was being trailed by an NBC camera crew for a future (Feb. 27) segment of the web's "World Of . . ." profile series. With that kind of plugging, Levine-engineered a Tiffany promotion at Woolworth prices.

7 Arts' 'Sunday' Play Buy

Seven Arts, which three weeks ago picked up the film rights to Tennessee Williams' "Night of the Iguana," yesterday (Tues.) bought film rights to another current Broadway show, Norman Krasna's comedy, "Sunday in New York."

Price paid is understood to be about $200,000, with pic to go into production before end of the year.

ments around the town, there were many times when they couldn't actually have fitted an entire union crew into "the set." He added that he had no antipathy for studio work, in fact preferred it, but that budget considerations were such that it was impossible on "Tracks."

Brkic, Yugoslavian-born, worked in the film industry in Italy for 11 years before coming to the States via shorter terms in France and Chile. In New York he's been active in commercial and industrial film making. Cox is an architect.

Once they find a distrib for their initial project, the pair plans to continue with two more properties, both of which are originals by Brkic, who also scripted "Tracks." The first is "Chimera," about a contemporary femme fatale, which would require location work in Paris, Portugal and Haiti, as well as New York, and the second, "The End of The Beginning," about a playwright who gets into a Pirandello-like confusion between illusion and reality.

'B Girl in Rhapsody' Brings a Rap

Judge Turns Critic, Find Burleycue Film (from Los Angeles) 'Relatively Stupid'

Columbus, O., Jan. 30.

Leroy C. Griffith, who operates the Parsons Follies, Columbus, indicated he would appeal the recent decision of Common Pleas Judge Joseph M. Harter, in Franklin County Common Pleas Court, which upheld a Municipal Court conviction of his violating the state obscene exhibition laws with the showing of a film, "B Girl in Rhapsody," at the theatre on Jan. 20, 1961. The judge made a judicial-type criticism on the film.

Griffith expects to appeal the conviction on the grounds that the Ohio statute is unconstitutional.

Judge Harter, before rendering his decision, viewed the film, made at and of a burlesque show in Los Angeles. He commented,

"Periodically throughout the show, the chorus of perhaps 12 to 16 girls, suitably but scantily attired for their work, performed relatively simple dance routines such as might be seen in any conventional burlesque theatre . . . There were skits put on by male as well as female actors during the show of traditional burlesque caliber . . . some suggestive, some relatively stupid.

"Each girl had her own tricks . . . . bumps, grinds, and other contortions and there were very few clothes to render the viewer's ability to see the muscular contortions difficult." The judge explained: "My responsibility, as a judge, is to review the exhibition as simply an item of evidence." His decision was that the Municipal Court verdict had been supported by competent evidence.

instruction for which she had paid Darling $5,000. She also claimed that she had given Darling $350 more on his promise that he wouldn't include her name in his bankruptcy proceedings.

But when the case came to trial Miss Lindstrom changed her story, asserting she hadn't read the letter before signing it. She said she could well afford the $5,000 which she paid for 1,000 hours of teaching and wouldn't prosecute Darling for delivering only 600 of them.

"There is no question in my mind that the complaining witness has had a tremendous change of heart," said Judge Lyons. "The state hasn't proved a case and there's nothing else that I can do but to dismiss it."

with a new legit show tentatively set to go in later.

Astor received a whopping $100,000 advance on the film from the theatre and one spokesman estimated that the theatre had gotten back all but about $15,000 of that money. The contract reportedly also specified that management had the right to unseat the pic if grosses fell below $15,000 for three weeks in a row. Astor spokesmen say it never did. However, other sources report that in the last three weeks' grosses fell from $12,000 to a low of $7,500 last week.

Astor is now lining up a move-over as soon as possible, and is contemplating continuing to advertise pic in the dailies in an effort to continue momentum of preem run.

wood at a press conference, when apprised of the Teachers Federation protest. Reagan said that "in fairness, they should wait and hear what somebody says before attacking."

"It's a sad day if you can't discuss issues without being attacked in advance," he told the reporters.

"Who is defending the extreme right?" asked Reagan who mentioned he's not a John Birch Society member.

Allied Artists Sets 8

Eight releases are slated from Allied Artists spanning into July, per the word last week from sales viceprez Morey R. Goldstein. That's in addition to the year's initialer, "George Raft Story."

Of the pending product, company's big guns look to be "Reprieve," due in April, and Peter Ustinov's "Billy Budd," ticketed for June. Other pix are "Bashful Elephant," February; "Hitler," March; "Big Wave" (coproduced with Toho, Japan), April; "Confessions of an Opium Eater," May; "The Bridge," June; and "Day of the Triffids," sci-fi entry, in July.

Holmes Novel, 'Horn' To Roll as N.Y. Indie; Rooks New Siddhartha

Acquisition of "The Horn," novel about a jazz saxophone player by John Clellan Holmes, for a feature film is revealed by new producer-director Conrad Rooks, whose only previous screen experience was on the New York-made exploitation item, "Girls, Inc."

Picture will be produced under a limited partnership, budgeted at $120,000 with provision for 10% "overcall." Of that total, about $40,000 already is in, Rooks reports. Cast will be composed principally of real jazz musicians, with all shooting to be done on New York locations. Eugene Shufton, who did the camerawork on "The Hustler" and "Something Wild," will perform the same services for "The Horn."

Rooks company is Siddhartha Productions. For those who might not know, Siddhartha is the family name of Buddha.

13 For 'Kings' in Denver 'El Cid' Then Follows

Denver, Jan. 30.

Sam Bronston production, "El Cid," has been slated to follow "King of Kings" into the Denham starting Feb. 8. Same reserved seat policy and prices will prevail as for "King of Kings" currently and previously "Ben-Hur."

Theatre was remodeled a couple of years ago at a cost of $250,000 for the "Ben-Hur" showing which ran 56 weeks and was followed by "Exodus" which ran 11, and "King of Kings" will have completed 13 weeks when "El Cid" takes over.

Sinatra On the Promo

Frank Sinatra, who hasn't been making many promotional appearances in recent years, will act as host to 2,500 orphans and handicapped children at an early morning preem showing of his United Artists release, "Sergeants Three," at the Capitol Theatre in New York Feb. 10.

A number of New York welfare organizations are participating in the event.

Ojai Shopper's Theatre

Ojai, Cal., Jan. 30.

New 600-seat film house will be built in the new shopping center here in this artists' colony some 90 miles north of Los Angeles. Construction starts within 30 days and project, headed by Saul Mahler and Jack O'Laughlin, is expected to open within 90 days thereafter.

Theatre, yet unnamed, will cost around $250,000.

Stars, Motives

fice of President of the United States

Schumach apparently doesn't recognize that the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences is not an "academy" in the true sense of the word and that the Oscars are determined on the basis of a popular vote of some 2,000 individuals. If the Oscars were to be decided by a panel of judges, all acknowledged artists of superior accomplishment in cinema, then advertising might be out of place.

The only way to attempt to keep the Academy awards representative under the system which prevails is to get out the most voters and to advertise pictures, performances, etc. is the only way to alert the voters. Perhaps Schumach has a better plan, but if he does he apparently is not yet ready to spring it. Certainly he couldn't be so naive as to believe that all the Acad voters have seen all the pictures released this year, or that it would not be desirable for voters to go back and have a second look at pix seen as long ago as January, 1961.

There is, however, one area (and it appears to have escaped Schumach) where the Academy is leaving itself open to justifiable criticism—that is in permitting producers to down grade performers from lead to supporting roles simply to give them a better chance to qualify for nominations. Latest to take advantage of this lamentable practice is Warner Bros., which has Warren Beatty down in the supporting category for both "Splendor in the Grass" and "Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone." That's unfair to actors who actually played supporting roles and it's unworthy of the Academy.

Regents Rap

able in printed form, may, with equal legality, be utilized in a motion picture. The presentation of events and the use of language by motion picture on the screen is not at all the same as in printed form. It might be possible to describe an act of intercourse in printed form with such restraint as to escape the charge of pornography. Certainly, there are dozens of books now in circulation which attempt to do this. The presentation of the same scene as outlined in the book by live characters on the screen cannot escape the charge of obscenity."

Ephraim London, who appeared in oral argument at New York, is expected to appeal the Regents' ruling, to the courts.

The special review committee of the Regents had as its chairman the newest member, Joseph W. Mc Governor, a practicing attorney as well as professor of law at Fordham University. Serving with him were: Carl H. Pforzheimer Jr., and Edward M. M. Warburg, both also of New York City.

The 800-word decision noted that the basis for licensure refusal was contained in a letter written to Harold Wiesenthal, of Films Around the World. The communication directed the elimination of "certain language"; also the elimination "on a still shot of a nude woman kneeling on a bed with buttocks toward the camera." The reason for the elimination given by the Motion Picture Director (Louis M. Pesce) was "obscene pursuant to Section 122 of the Education Law."

The Regents reviewed the film; heard oral argument and examined the briefs and other material submitted.

Expect Shapiro To Sue Regents

Irwin Shapiro's distribution company, Films Around the World, via attorney Ephraim London, may serve papers within a week on the N.Y. State Board of Regents as a first step to force the rejection of "The Connection" into the courts. The charge that a state may not constitutionally forbid the "dirty word" in question is believed to be without previous adjudication in the United States. The word in question appears on the soundtrack some 90 times, so is not an isolated instance.

The word is common today in novels but still taboo in most media, though it was employed in one line of dialog in Archibald MacLeish's recent allegorical stage play, "J.B."

There are already some ironies apparent in this case. The American press simply cannot print the word about which the dispute revolves. Hence there is a certain unreality to the news stories. The mental image of the nine justices of the U.S. Supreme Court ultimately sitting en banc to count the 90 times is already intriguing attorneys and journalists.

Robert Dhery's Dog Story

French star-director Robert Dhery cannot easily define the characteristics of an "abnormal dog," but he can describe his experiences with one—the huge mastiff which plays a small but significant role in Continental Distributing's wacky comedy, "La Belle Americaine."

In New York last week, just before returning to Paris after helping to launch the first U.S. dates for "Americaine," Dhery and his wife (and costar) Colette Brosset recalled with mixed horror and gaity their experiences with "the world's dumbest beast." When he sent out a call for a dog for the picture, Dhery said, he was beseiged with trainers with all types of dogs, most of whom had the makings of a Rin-Tin-Tin. Unfortunately, however, his eye was caught by the mastiff, because he had such a nice, gentle, disarmingly stupid face. The mastiff's trainer hadn't exactly tried to dissuade Dhery from taking the mastiff, but rather had sought to interest the director in another dog. Dhery persisted, and he now claims he would have trouble finding another animal, any kind of animal, that could possibly equal the ignorance displayed by his canine discovery.

The script called for the dog to growl and bark fiercely when he spotted another dog. The mastiff yawned. Dhery stood outside of camera range with a cat. The dog looked the other way. Dhery thought perhaps the mastiff had some affection for his trainer, and made as if to attack the trainer. The dog seemed sleepy. Finally they decided that they would starve the dog into taking an interest in his work. Three days he went without food, and when he was finally tempted with a plate of red meat, he wasn't hungry.

Reported Dhery as the final irony: the dog is now a celebrity in great demand by film and tv people. It is, in short, a variation on the old Show Biz success story of the empty headed amateur who happens onto the right part and gets catapulted to fame others have been seeking with monomaniacal professionalism for years.

Germany's Rich & Show Biz

right (a German count) proudly revealed that he has "a very rich American wife," and the guest on her left (German industrialist) announced that he's going to St. Moritz for the winter season with his actress-wife so that "everyone can see her new chinchilla coat."

Down Munich way (where the Bavarian loden cloth coats are now gold-plated), a playboy named James Graser has just opened the St. James Club, a by-membership-only club that is open to just 99 millionaries, of whom 50 are already signed and sealed.

(A West German millionaire has to have 1,000,000 marks, or $250,000, which puts him just one-quarter of the way to being a U.S. millionaire).

This elegant locale features wooden walls from a centuries old farmhouse in Baravia, and the fireplace comes from a thousand-year-old castle. He invited 130 guests for the opening night free-for-all, but 300 showed up and did him out of a 25-quart barrel of whiskey plus 46 bottles of the stuff, and 72 bottles of champagne.

Doorman is a count (probably without a rich American wife). Count Aljoscha Sabaroff, who claims to be the former adjutant of the Russian czar.

Graser got his experience for opening the plush pub, he claims, by spending 25 years on a bar stool. He decided the only way to make it pay was to exchange his seat and get behind the bar. Now he's half way to a full-up membership of millionaires.

Down Duesseldorf way, promoter Helmut Mattner (who brought the Moscow State Circus to Germany) has just opened an old-Russian restaurant and club called Datscha. Guests can sip champagne from a copy of the former Czar's crown, an 18-carat gold production decked with Siberian emeralds which he claims cost $12,000 to reproduce. Every seat in the Datscha is decked with sable, at an alleged cost per place of about $4,000. The bar is built in the shape of the trika sled in which Czarina Elisabeth used to glide about.

Unfortunately, you can't pay the tab in rubles.

Munich's Plush Ball

An expensive Fasching Ball of the select Madame Club just kicked off the pre-Lenten carnival season in Munich. At an entry fee of $12.50, the Munich Deutsches Theatre was jammed to the walls with celebrities and rich industrialists doing The Twist to the music of three orchestras.

Prize tossed out at the Tombola (form of lottery here) was a $25,000 hunk of ground on the Italian Riviera. Secondary prizes consisted of a plot of ground in Rio de Janeiro and a toy poodle.

Mistress of ceremonies was Swiss television star Heidi Babel, singing came from the new local find, Israeli chirper Carmela Corren. In the midst of all the diamonds, minks and tails appeared only one simply clad man—a genuine streetsinger, 58-year-old bearded guitar plunker Christian Behring.

And now, to bring the new form of rich entertainment onto the television screen as well, Bernd Engelmann is doing a series titled "Deutschland deine Millionaire" (Germany, Your Millionaires) for Northwest Television of Hamburg.

First part deals with Munich industrial financier Rudlof Muenemann. Next closeups concern Adi Vogel, husband of German actress Winnie Markus and owner of the swank hotel in a castle, Schloss Fuschl; and Duesseldorf millionaire Wilhelm Becker.

"I will present the millionaires as they really are. The shows will not be aggressive. I don't plan to anger anyone," Engelmann explained.

Engelmann has also sold a series about the millionaires to the German mass circulation weekly magazine, "Quick."

Community Aroused

number of juveniles took stand, picture was screened yesterday for Municipal Judge Carson Taylor, who ruled that jurors would get a fair presentation of evidence by seeing film in court instead of going to a theatre. Courtroom screening was objected to by defense attorney, who had requested theatre showing after first objecting to film even being shown on grounds it was seized contrary to laws of search and seizure. Defense Attorney Fleishman argued after Judge Taylor had seen pic in morning and before afternoon jury screening that poor lighting, distorted sound and "the interruption to continuity" caused by three five-minute breaks to change reels distracted from film's entertainment value.

"Henry" early last year caused arrest of three theatremen when it was shown at Monica Theatre, in Los Angeles county, but a Beverly Hills judge ruled that picture wasn't obscene and released defendants.

Paramount on a stock exchange basis, with exception of two pix, "On the Double" and "It Started in Naples," which they made under the Capri banner and in which they retain joint interest.

He said pair split up, after 14 years of filmmaking together, for reasons of time and economics. It takes the same length of time and the same money to make one picture together as it does to make one alone. This way, they get two pictures in the same time they used to get only one.

Rose expects to go to Europe upon completion of "Action," where he will develop screenplays on his two next films, "Purpose—Pleasure" and "Every Wednesday Night." Both are original comedies by Rose.

See New Impetus To Spanish Oaters

Madrid, Jan. 30.

The coproduced western is expected to become a familiar part of the Spanish production scene following Jack Lamont, director of Argo Films, agreement with Hispamex to film "Kid Rodelo" as one of a three-film program bringing the far west to the shores of the Mediterranean.

"Kid Rodelo," based on Louis L'Amour's novel "Desperate Men," will star Cameron Mitchell and Dan Duryea. Lamont is down as executive producer with George Sherman handling the production reins. Production start is scheduled for early spring. Lamont is also seeking to tie up Don Prindle's screenplay "The Grass is Red," a Rio Grande saga on which Lamont had an option several years ago for his coproduction program in Spain.

Spanish westerns, initiated with location filming for "Sheriff of Fractured Jaw" in 1958, were recently spurred with completion of "Savage Guns" (also known as "Brutal Land"), a Capricorn-Tecisa co-venture Michael Carreras directed and produced entirely in Spain for M-G-M release.

Hemingway's 'Arms' Out In 1963 When Wald Pic Will Have Played Off

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Ernest Hemingway's "A Farewell to Arms" will be reissued by 20th-Fox in 1963. The company has re-registered the title to protect it in the future.

Although there had been discussions for re-releasing the David O. Selznick production this year, idea was abandoned because of new Jerry Wald pic "Adventures Of A Young Man," based on Hemingway's Nick Adams short stories. Shooting on "Adventures" wound last week and is slated for summer release.

MILTON EISENHOWER PRAISES STEIN PLAN

Research to Prevent Blindness, the research foundation set up by Jules C. Stein, board chairman of MCA, Inc., paves the way for the construction of a $1,200,000 eye research building at Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions, Baltimore, per Milton S. Eisenhower, Hopkins prexy. The project represents the first step in the nationwide program of the Stein group whose goal is to stimulate "the most intensive research attack ever directed against blindness."

The new facility will enable for the first time integrated teams of scientists to work on major causes of blindness within a single centre. Architect for the new building, construction of which is to commence this year, is James R. Edmonds, of Baltimore. The new building is also designed to triple present research facilities at the Wilmar Opthalmological Institute of Johns Hopkins.

Research to Prevent Blindness was praised by Eisenhower. He declared that the foundation holds significant promise for future relationships between health organizations and medical schools joining forces in a program that will benefit the general welfare. RPB underwrote all fund-raising costs and helped the university raise more than $700,000 in voluntary contributions which enabled Johns Hopkins to qualify for a $491,000 construction grant from the National Institute of Health. The MCA board chairman is a former practicing ophtalmologist.

Second Japanese Film Party Due In Hawaii

Honolulu, Jan. 30.

Japan's Toho Studio plans to send a crew here to make a motion picture. Toho's director of foreign business, Tadashi Yonemoto, says the third part of a three-installment film, "Hong Kong no Yoru" ("A Night in Hong Kong") will be filmed here.

Shochku, another Japanese studio, recently filmed "Sanga Ari" here.

Page, Shenandoah, Gutted; Commonwealth Circuit Relights Its State

Kansas City, Jan. 30.

Commonwealth Amusement Corp. has reopened the State Theatre at Shenandoah, Iowa following destruction by fire of the former firstrun theatre, the Page, there Jan. 9. The State was reopened Jan. 13 by special effort of Frank Kennedy, former Page manager, and Roy Tucker, purchasing, and Charles Tryon, maintenance, execs from the home office here.

The Page broke into flames shortly after the theatre was opened for business Jan. 9. Wilbur Smith, projectionist reported that the fire apparently started from an explosion in a battery of electrical switches. Before it was over additional fire companies from three nearby towns were needed to bring the flames under control.

Kennedy supervised an orderly evacuation of patrons from the theatre and of tenants from apartments in the same building. He and his mother, who occupied one of the apartments together, lost all of their possessions except the clothes they were wearing.

Prints of "The Hustler," "Pit and the Pendulum" and "Ring of Fire" were destroyed in the fire. Trailer for "Ring of Fire" has just flashed on the screen when Kennedy made the announcement to evacuate the premises.

Richard Grear, Commonwealth president, described the loss as severe, but said circuit officials are thankful that no one was hurt. Firemen had to fight the blaze in sub-zero temperatures.

Damage was partly covered by insurance, according to home office officials. They said the Page will be rebuilt as soon as possible. The State had been dark indefinitely.

Swedes Send Hollywood Ingmar Bergman's 'Glass'

Swedish Film Academy has nominated Ingmar Bergman's "Through a Glass Darkly" as the official Swedish entry in the annual Academy Awards sweepstakes, foreign film category. It's being released in the United States by Janus Films.

Bergman's "Virgin Spring" copped top honors as best foreign production in 1960.

Universal's Net Earnings

Universal Pictures net earnings for fiscal 1961, ended Oct. 28, was $3,005,367, after a provision of $2,460,000 for Federal taxes. Deducting preferred stock divvy, this amounted to $3.22 per share on the common stock. That's a substantial drop from the previous year, but expected.

It demonstrates the relative product strength to compare U's books in the wake of fiscal '60, which showed net earnings of $6,313,357, good for $6.92 per share of common. A vintage year.

See 'Second Time Around' As Paced Like 'Return' On Initial B.O. Take

That 20th-Fox seems to have a substantial domestic click in the Debbie Reynolds' starrer, "Second Time Around," looks obvious in a Jan. 26 inter-office memo which compares the pic's grosses to date to last year's "Return to Peyton Place," after a like period of playoff.

So far, "Second Time," which played first dates in November, has a theatre gross of $1,324,542, compared to $1,256,579 for "Return" in the comparable situations. Interestingly enough, this is despite fact that "Return" beat "Second Time" in certain key dates (New York, $115,027 to $87,356), indicating the Reynolds pic is showing its strongest legs is the less sophisticated situations.

In VARIETY's roundup of 1961 pic grosses, "Return" was reported as having taken in $3,000,000 in distributor rental domestically during the year, with a total estimated rental foreseen of $4,500,000.

Completes 'Great Escape'

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

W. R. Burnett has completed his screenplay of "The Great Escape," which John Sturges will direct early in April for The Mirisch Co. and United Artists.

Writer's new novel "The Widow Barony" has been set for publication in England.

Tripler at 49c. Invests $25,000

St. Paul, Jan. 30.

The fact that Charles and Sheldon Rubenstein were willing to spend $25,000 to improve and beautify their 49c admission triple feature neighborhood Faust theatre, which they acclaim now to be the city's most attractive, reflects confidence in the film exhibition business' present and future.

So commented Bill Diehl in St. Paul Dispatch.

'Lovers' Quarrel

a matter which is readily ascertainable. The knowledge of obscenity which is necessary to support a conviction under the law is either actual knowledge or, where the obscenity is hard-core pornography or is a matter of common knowledge, constructive knowledge. The 'possession' required, to support a conviction is not the mere private possession of an individual for his own gratification, but a possession for the wrongful purpose of circulating or exhibiting obscenity, whether for profit or otherwise. The statute on which this conviction is based is a valid exercise of the police power of the state," the decision declared.

Judge Taft said in part: "I cannot be as positive in condemning the film involved . . . as the majority opinion is. Under this statute, if anyone looks at a movie film that he has lawfully acquired to determine whether he should exhibit it and finds it to be obscene, he is forthwith and at that instant guilty of a serious crime. As a result, some who might otherwise look at movie films that are not obscene to determine whether they should exhibit those films may well be discouraged from doing so, and free circulation and exhibition of movie films will be impeded." Taft added that, in his opinion, "this film is to use the words of the statute, 'obscene, lewd or lascivious'."

In the other case involving 'The Lovers,' the high court reversed the conviction of Allan S. Warth, former manager of the Art Theatre, Dayton, and now manager of the Esquire Theatre, Cincinnati, who was charged under a different law with showing the same film. Warth had been convicted under a law making it a misdemeanor to possess an obscene film, without reference to knowledge or the element of knowledge on the part of the accused as to its obscenity.

Dayton police confiscated the film on Nov. 20, 1959. A Dayton municipal court jury found him guilty on Feb. 3, 1960, after about three hours' deliberation. Warth was fined $1,000 and sentenced to 30 days in the workhouse, by Judge Emmett J. Jackson. The workhouse term and $500 of the fine were suspended, on condition he show no more indecent films.

Six Ohio Supreme Court judges concurred in the Warth decision, which may have some effect on the five charges now pending against Edward Eads, 31, manager of the Far Hills Theatre in Oakwood, O., adjacent to Dayton. Eads has been convicted of exhibiting two obscene films, "Sins of Youth" and "The Immoral Mr. Teas," and has three similar charges pending before Oakwood Municipal Judge Frederick Howell.

Oakwood Prosecutor Francis McDaniel said dismissal of the charges is contingent upon his review of the Ohio Supreme Court's decision, and what effect that decision may have on the law under which Eads was charged. Since the Supreme Court held unconstitutional that section of the law which makes mere possession of obscene matter in itself illegal, McDaniel could still have Eads prosecuted under another section of the obscenity laws, that of "having knowledge" of possession of an obscene film. Because this section constitutes a felony charge, a grand jury indictment would be necessary. Eads was fined $2,500 and handed a six-month jail sentence, but both were held in abeyance pending his appeal.

Harold J. Salemson has joined Joe Wolhandler Associates. First assignment is Charles K. Feldman's production of "Walk on the Wild Side," Columbia release.

Little Messages To Film Producers

IMPACT, VIBRATION, and ECHO

Any periodical's advertising value is directly related to its editorial quality. The impact of this trade paper is generally conceded. That it stirs virbration is a matter of common notice. Less realized is the echo, the widespread pick-up of news and feature stories. A current example of this echo-value of Variety is an article by Gideon Bachmann, "Rise of Cheap, Significant U.S. Films," which appeared in the International Film Edition, April 26, 1961. Thus far there have been 14 reprints in foreign periodicals, to wit:

'One, Two' Okay $11,000 Cleve.; 'Song' 10G, 5th

Cleveland, Jan. 30.

Film biz here currently is on soggy side. "Innocents" shapes on lightweight side at Allen in first while "One, Two, Three" looks barely okay in initial stanza at State. "Tender Is Night" is rated soft in opener at Palace. "Flower Drum Song," only pic showing real profit, still is sturdy in fifth stanza at Hipp, same as last week.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (Stanley-Warner) (2,866; $1-$1.50) — "Innocents" (20th). Rather light $12,000 but stays on. Last week, "Sail Crooked Ship" (Col), $11,500.

Colony Art (S-W) (1,354; $1.50)—"St. Trinian's" (Indie). Routine $3,000. Last week, "Double Bunk" (Indie) (2d wk), $2,800 in 9 days.

Pix Biz Message to N.Y. Times

will not require Supreme Court approval to be shown publicly").

While plenty of other exhibs and distribs have used the full-column "reader" idea in the Sunday Times, this is believed to be the first time one has been used to set off an accompanying display ad.

Twentieth, however, has not been the only one to challenge the Times film ad pages. The little (250-seat) Bleecker Street Cinema in Greenwich Village is up in arms.

Starting last week, the Bleecker management has been handing out to its patrons a mimeoed sheet headed "Once Again—An Apology for The New York Times." The text explains that "during the last two months, on the average of once a week, the Cinema's advertisement in a daily edition of the New York Times either has been totally in error or hasn't been run by the newspaper at all . . ."

The last straw was Jan. 25 when in place of the ad scheduled announcing the final day of "The Italian Straw Hat," the Times reran the copy from Jan. 18 announcing the last day of "Ten Days That Shook The World" and the opening of "Straw Hat" the following day.

The Bleecker management says, "Sadly, since most of our patrons are regular readers of the N. Y. Times, we cannot withdraw all advertising from the publication because of their weekly average of six advertisements right to the one wrong. All we can hope is the sorry situation will be corrected. Until that time, we must reluctantly ask you to no longer depend on the Times . . ."

The text doesn't say so, but a Bleecker spokeswoman reports that one of the more irate of the theatre's patrons was none other than Times critic Bosley Crowther, who went to the Bleecker to see "Straw Hat" and found a totally different program. Yes, he'd looked at the ad in the Times.

Yanks' Unpopularity In Portugal Complicates Jack Miles' Troubles

Madrid, Jan. 30.

Film producer Jack Miles from the Cathay Studios in Hollywood has been given a hard time in Portugal, where Americans are currently unpopular because of the Angola and Goa situations. But apart from his inability to reduce his "co-production" deal to satisfactory clarity he reports that the sound and camera equipment available in Lisbon could not, in his opinion, produce technical quality for the world market.

Miles is definitely vexed by his experiences which started, he reports, with Albert Ametau, Hollywood representative of Tobis of Portugal, through whose offices he entered a 45-55 agreement under which he and backer Charles Hall were to provide "above the line" talent with Tobis to supply everything below the line.

Miles declares that he was in for disillusionment upon reaching Lisbon with Yank director Thor Brooks and a British cast of players including Monti Landis, Bobby Howse, Barbara Roscoe and Dillis Lay.

He could never get the Portuguese end, he complains, to detail what below the line would cover. Nor would the latter accept travel, living expenses and other standard debits.

After two weeks of snail-like filming and constant effort to clarify contractual obligations, Miles penetrated Portuguese soldiers ringing the American Embassy and called on the U. S. Consul for help. According to Miles, he was told that Yanks were unpopular at the moment and that nothing could be done through diplomatic channels to support the producer's case. Miles also appealed to the government film chief who expressed doubt that Tobis could raise the money stipulated in the coproduction agreement signed with Ametau in Hollywood. Although Director Brooks and Backer Hall elected to stay on in Lisbon to get "Forbidden Fruit" finished at any cost, Miles left for Madrid after serving notice of his withdrawal.

His first taste of film-making abroad taught him, he says, that no co-agreement should ever be signed before the Yank producer has been given full opportunity to inspect equipment and facilities prior to the start of production. He also advised full eye-to-eye accord on bi-lingual budget details before cameras start to grind.

Plan $500,000 Ozoner In Albuquerque, N.M.

Albuquerque, Jan. 30.

Sero Amus. Co. of Los Angeles, which operates 38 ozoners in the southwest, plans to build a $500,000 drive-in in Albuquerque this summer. New ozoner, to be tagged the Satellite Drive In, will be on an 80-acre tract in booming northeast section of the city.

City already has six ozoners and seven hardtoppers in operation with another hardtop and a Cinerama house both being projected in the next 12 months.

Shapley Astronomy Film Cartoon Financed By Hubley and Admirers

Showcorporation has obtained distribution of a feature cartoon based on astronomer Harlow Shapley's book, "Of Stars and Men," with release slated for May. Film is a project of veteran animator John Hubley, ex-Disney and UPA, and Shapley is heard for most of the narration.

Per the required legal notice filed with the N.Y. County Clerk, Hubley, as corporate principal, apparently enlisted every friend and relative he could to meet the estimated $185,000 negative investment. Backers include Shapley himself and tv scripter Reginald Rose.

Trans-Lux's New Artie; Handling Three Imports

Trans-Lux's theatrical plans, as included in the entertainment division "blueprint" given in New York Thursday (25) by prexy Richard Brandt, include the construction of a new $500,000 artie on Manhattan's eastside, to be called the Trans-Lux East, and the release of three new imports, the British "Horror Hotel," French "Mort de Bele," and Danish "A Stranger Knocks."

Company's overall entertainment investments, including those in tv, will come to $2,800,000 this year, according to Brandt. Investment in three new imports is said to be $500,000 "before they are ready to be put on screen."

Ed R. Svigals, Trans-Lux Distributing Corp. veep, reported the company has been achieving a "depth of distribution" in areas where foreign pix ordinarily do not play—particularly southern and midwestern states where T-L has played "up to 90% of all possibilities in each territory." He estimates company's current (British) exploitation pic, "The Head," will get a distributor's gross of $750,000 from 5,000 theatres.

List of three new imports already announced will be supplemented with others during the year, Svigals said.

Peper, Cleaves Shift

William Peper has rejoined the amusement staff of the N.Y. World-Telegram and Sun. He moved back to the entertainment department after a stint as a city-side reporter handling features on Brooklyn.

Along with the Peper shift, Henderson Cleaves, who was on the amusement staff, has been moved to the Brooklyn section.

cal production is "Walk on the Wild Side," which deals with prostitution and lesbianism. He says an influencing factor behind the signing of Jane Fonda and Capucine for other producers' projects has been their appearance in the "explosive" "Walk."

This type of product, he also insists, will provide the "breakthrough toward new latitudes" for Hollywood in general and will place the American film colony on par with foreign producers so far as subject matter is concerned.

Drive-In Sanction By Judge; Area Zoned But After Project's Start

Noblesville, Ind., Jan. 30.

More than a year's litigation to halt construction of a drive-in theatre at 99th st. and State Route 431, on a 40-acre tract in Clay Township, adjacent to the town of Carmel, came to a climax when Hamilton Circuit Judge Charles W. Ardery Jr., denied a petition for an injunction to halt the project, and held that work on the drive-in may continue.

The judge based his verdict on the fact that the builders started construction before any zoning regulations were extended over the area involved. Defendants in the suit were Harry and Hazel Parsons, owner of the land; North-side Amusement Corp., developers of the project, and Perine Development Corp., Indianapolis, the contractors.

The suit to halt construction contended the developers had failed to obtain a building permit, and sought to enjoin the builders from further activity under zoning authority assumed by the town of Carmel in August, 1960. A master plan for zoning throughout Clay Township was not adopted until May 2, 1961, after work on the theatre began. Nearby residents of the exclusive area claimed the theatre would devalue their property, affect living conditions, and create traffic hazards.

The situation arose because most of Hamilton County was left without zoning protection in 1959 when Hamilton County Commissioners repealed a county-wide ordinance. Since then, the town of Carmel has extended its zoning authority over all of Clay Township, while the Noblesville City Plan Commission has gained jurisdiction over a two-mile buffer area around Noblesville and all of Delaware Township.

TAX AGENTS ONES TO 'PROBATE' KOVACS WILL

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Ernie Kovacs left an estate with a gross value of $2,100,000, according to a petition filed in Superior Court by his widow, singer Edie Adams. This figure, however, Miss Adams stated, doesn't present a true picture of the estate since the comedian was "deeply in debt."

Petition asked that court allow her $2,500 monthly allowance for support of herself and three minor children, two Kovacs' by a previous marriage.

Kovacs long had been trying to untangle his income taxes with the Government. "We reached a point where we know how much we owe for 1956 and 1957, but we have no idea what our liabilities are for 1958, '59, '60 and '61," actress said.

There's a tax lien against Kovac's $600,000 house and its contents, Miss Adams reported, and until Kovac's affairs are unsnarled there is no estimating the exact value of the estate.

Spain Okays Upped Scale 'Kings,' 'Cid,' 'Spartacus,'

Madrid, Jan. 23.

Film exhibitors in Spain were given partial relief from the rigorously-controlled boxoffice price scale when the government authorized a 20% increase at the boxoffice for such spectacular productions as "El Cid," "King of Kings," "Spartacus," and "The Guns of Navarone."

Exhibs have loudly and consistently lamented the admission freeze over the past six years and recent official green light to boost price scales for the super-spectaculars gave indication that further relief would be forthcoming early this year.

Government authorized increase is also regarded as a modification of official policy resisting distrib and exhib requests for approval to road-show multi-million dollar blockbusters.

Collins, Joliet Gutted

Chicago, Jan. 30.

The Collins Theatre in Joliet, Ill., was destroyed by fire last Wed. (10). The theatre, which operates only on Sunday, was empty at the time of the fire.

Mrs. Hope Angeles, owner of the theatre, estimated damage at $45,000. Cause of the fire was undetermined.

Minow & The Men For All TV Seasons

By GEORGE ROSEN

Washington, Jan. 30.

Up to this point in the dramatic confrontation of Newton Minow and his FCC confreres and the television network executives in the resumption of hearings into tv network practices, what particularly emerges is a full-dimensional portrait of a group of men representing (in the order of their appearance) both CBS and NBC, who are gifted with an acute sense of responsibility.

If nothing else comes out of the protracted siftings and probings into television network practices (and at this stage there's no telling the extent of the regulations, if any, to be imposed), the fact is that the hearings have served to throw into sharp focus the type of maturity and aggressive leadership with which the key functionaries in network tv are endowed.

Standing out above all else in the first week of hearings was the CBS leader—corporate prexy Frank Stanton, with the status of "a man for all tv seasons" as he bore the brunt of this responsibility. And if NBC board chairman Robert Sarnoff's testimony (charging that the FCC was seeking to regulate the tv networks) set off the hearings' first major pyrotechnic display, it also demonstrated, for all the roughing up that Sarnoff took, that here, too, along with responsibility, were men of resolution and determination.

For what perhaps is most illuminating of all is the kind of executive who is currently revealing his skills and knowledge before Minow & Co.—men who, whether the FCC is willing to concede the point or not, are inscribing into the FCC archives, both in their prepared statements and in response to questioning, an enlightening, updated primer on the why-what-when-and-how of television. From Minow on down, the august FCC body last week may not have batted an eyelash, yet it was abundantly evident that their education in the arts and skills of tv by responsible architects was being enhanced to a considerable degree.

It could well be that when all the findings are carefully evaluated and appraised, the FCC may decide that some infractions and misdemeanors are in need of remedy; that existing network concepts are in some cases at variance with the precepts and behavior patterns as gleaned through FCC eyes. The closing stages of the CBS examination gave strong hint of network regulation lurking in the background. It's conceivable that the Government agency may even throw the book at the networks. Yet for all that, Minow and his brethren must inevitably concede the high style and class of the executive manpower that tv has incubated as was so forcefully illustrated last week.

Certainly television's administrative counterpart is a far cry from the salad days of radio when management was too frequently linked with fugitives from a service station or garage. If all of this assumes major importance, it's because of what it portends for the future of an industry too long held in disrepute.

Stanton Spark

The manner in which CBS corporate prexy Frank Stanton sparked his 11-man executive team, confronting the FCC as a unit with impeccable Swiss-movement precision and timing, was a revelation. Watching Stanton take the ball and alternately toss it to tv prez Jim Aubrey, or News president Dick Salant, or to an Oscar Katz, or a Mike Dann, or a Tom Fisher, or a Joe Ream, or a Bill Lodge, or a Bill Hylan (depending on who was asking what) was an object lesson in heads-up executive field play. Here was a team with a cumulative 200-year track record in broadcasting. But far more meaningful was the direction this experience has taken.

It's for this reason that one can applaud the total exposure given the FCC hearings, particularly in the three Sunday network displays on NBC-TV and in the full hour recap on WNEW-TV Sunday night. Granted, where the general public is concerned, it all adds up to gab and more gab; that they would pack a far greater Nielsen wallop if the programs had the benefit of a Bud Collyer to ask: "Will the real Newton Minow stand up?" Nevertheless, even this simple nationwide exposure of tv's executive manpower with all cerebral cylinders clicking can help immeasurably in restoring public confidence in a medium subjected to brickbats and D.C. prat-falls.

The Sarnoff Tuneup For NBC

Like Stanton, Sarnoff took the position that regulation of tv networks is unnecessary, unwise and unworkable as a practical matter. "We cannot," said Sarnoff, accept the premise that the public interest demands the regulation of networks, and that all that remains is to decide just how they should be regulated. (In the resultant question-and-answer period (see separate box) the FCC had some different arguments on the subject).

Pointing out that the development of audience interest is a process of "gradual evolution that sets its own pace," the NBC chieftain emphasized that "the artificial stimulation of Government prodding of broadcasters will not speed viewers to change their tastes."

As to "how should the public interest be represented in broadcasting?", Sarnoff testified: "The answer, I submitted, is by the public itself," adding that the paramount idea of the democratic process is that "people themselves, given opportunity for choice, can best choose for themselves."

"Such a conception," Sarnoff said, "applies with particular force to the area of personal taste and to the media of expression which, like broadcasting, depend for their existence on their ability to satisfy public tastes and interests. Broadcasting, more than Government or any other American institution, affords the public direct, swift and telling means of making its own decisions and registering its own preferences on a day-to-day—indeed, hour-to-hour—basis. And there is no type of program to which the public is not given reasonable and consistent opportunity to respond.

"Against this remarkably effective system of free choice, some would impose the centralized authority of Government to determine what is good for the public to see and hear. I do not believe the public has delegated that right to any group. Certainly the Commission is not empowered to act as an agent for the public in this area, to speak for what the public should get. Rather, it is the Commission's role to see to it that broadcasters keep in touch with their audiences so that they can gauge the public's response to what they offer, and can build on that response."

Sarnoff expressed the view that programming goals of responsible broadcasters are "no lower than those the Commissioners might personally hold out." What is at issue, he said, is the method, degree and speed with which such goals can be achieved "as a greater volume and variety of serious, enriching and informative programming."

"The only effective method for winning these goals securely," he said, "is the method conscientious broadcasters now follow: to apply patience, skill and resourcefulness in exposing viewers to programs of this kind that will whet their taste for more. This is the art of wooing an audience, and like other forms of courtship, it depends on the consent of the wooed. The audience must be captivated—not made captive by Government dictate. Indeed, nobody ever took an audience by force; nobody can make people watch television programs they do not want to see—neither the Government, the networks, the stations or the advertisers."

Sarnoff's Strategy

Washington, Jan. 30.

The hunting season got under way Monday (29)—a week late—at the FCC's programming inquiry. Robert Sarnoff, NBC board chairman, was declared fair game.

Sarnoff had not even completed his prepared statement when the commissioners began peeling off their kid gloves and network study chief Ashbrook Bryant took out his harpoon gun.

Sarnoff, leading off NBC's presentation, first was pounced on by Commissioner Frederick Ford while still reading his statement (Stanton was uninterrupted during his prepared testimony). Ford challenged the NBC topper on his allegation the Commission is trying to regulate programming. There was nothing in FCC's actions to indicate anything of the kind, he snapped. The whole Sarnoff statement appeared to be "not pertinent," Ford declared.

Commission Chairman Newton Minow, almost reticent with Stanton last week, found his tongue and joined in the sport. Sarnoff bluntly challenged the Washington regulatory trend (particularly the FCC-backed network regulation bill) and the tv reformists championing the move. Minow was provoked to make the threat that unless the industry comes up with some substitute legislative proposals to ameliorate the problem of programming responsibility, the Commission might be obliged to abandon "wrist-slapping" in favor of tougher disciplinary means against broadcasters.

Sarnoff said he did not know what he could do about this since he opposed network legislation of any kind.

Ford, who rarely lets his emotions get the better of his sense of decorum, was obviously irked over a suggestion by Sarnoff that the 100-plus civic clubs etc. who assailed tv in the 1959-60 hearings wanted to impose their peculiar tv tastes on the rest of the people. Minow and Bryant similarly took umbrage at Sarnoff's implication that the sheer weight of the criticism, dignified by being levelled during an official FCC proceeding, might bend broadcasters of program to please someone else beside their audience.

"You are saying that all this is speculation on your part—these charges you are making against the commission?" Ford queried heatedly.

And Bryant, who had an air of being unleashed, asked with some sarcasm: "What you did here was set up a straw man (censorship) and knock it down, wasn't it?"

No, averred Sarnoff.

Some observers saw little or no difference in the basic philosophies outlined by Sarnoff and Stanton, they both ran counter to that of Minow & Co.

The difference was in the tenor and phraseology. Sarnoff didn't mince his words, and Stanton wielded eloquent ploys to win honors for his witnessmanship.

Beanbags, Not Brickbats

By JAY LEWIS

Washington, Jan. 30.

The fight fans were disappointed when the top-billed antagonists in the opening round of the "Great Confrontation" at Federal Communications Commission lobbed beanbags instead of brickbats.

CBS president Frank Stanton had laid down the gauntlet, but there was no infante terrible to pick it up.

Only a self-effacing, soft-spoken young man maned Newton Minow. Amiable of visage and voice, he offerred no serious challenge to Stanton's plan or oft-repeated enunciation of a broadcast philosophy directly antithetical to Minowism and its belief in the wasteland syndrome.

The heavy in the first week of the network programming Inquiry's close-out phase turned out to be—in the eyes of the industry—Ashbrook P. Bryant, head of the network study staff and acting D.A. in the proceedings. In a ponderous baritone which seemed to stop the clock in the big Interstate Commerce Commission hearing room borrowed for the occasion, Bryant spread out a heavy mire of questioning for Stanton and his top lieutenants. It took some wading, but the CBS hierarchy managed to slog through, and score points too.

Moreover, despite the goading, Stanton showed signs of bristling only once during the course of Bryant's onerous queries, which verged often on the leading and loaded.

The current NBC inning and ABC's turn next week should indicate whether Minow is actually trying to shed his angry young Eagle Scout image or whether he was simply holding off and stoking up his fires to scorch NBC, ABC or both. Whatever his motive, the change of aspect marks Minow as capable of role switches—from a beardless Jehovah-type, full of righteous wrath, to a subdued, fledgling public servant anxious to learn from his elders. The abiltiy to accommodate and change tack as the winds shift is alomst a prerequisite for survival here where the unswerving disappear quickly off the deep end, and the opportunists thrive.

UHF The Solution?

One of the most significant utterances of the first week was Minow's off-hand remark just before the end of the CBS testimony. He told Stanton, that, maybe after all, 90% of the program problem under discussion was soluble by expanding tv into UHF. The channel shortage, of course, is not an issue at the hearing. So the question is raised, why the big production, the Commission sitting en banc, the advance ballyhoo and Minow's call for full publicity of the three-week proceedings, when a development outside their scope could largely make the whole deal meet? And, bearing on Minow's relations with the networks, what's one-tenth of a problem between friends?

Commissioner Frederick W. Ford added to the puzzlement of those who wondered what they were doing there by pointing out that the option time issue was inextricably interwined with just about every aspect of network programming, yet had never even been mentioned, much less explored. Option time, because it is pending for Commission decision, is unspeakable, said Broadcast Bureau head Kenneth Cox, so Ford dropped the subject.

But with two issues, UHF and option time, ignored but integral to any solution to the programming problem—according to the Commissioners' own admission, the inquiry takes on the aspect of a phantom chase, full of sound and some fury and ending with a huge report signifying not much at all.

However, there is still the matter of public image and points to be scored. And no matter how one kept score, CBS was clear winner of the first round. The classy articulate Stanton managed to put CBS on the offensive in a situation wherein he and his brass were called to answer complaints, not make them.

Moreover, Stanton, although ably asisted by Joseph Ream, programming practices v.p., Richard Salant, President of CBS News and others, carried most of the attack singlehandedly. And on occasion, he stepped in resourcefully when one of his subordinates had been caught in a rhetorical cul-de-sacs.

Bones of Contention

Here are some of the big bones of contention of the first week of the inquiry, and how they were picked:

Censorship or the "drift toward programming control"—Stanton's prepared statement, couched in able prose, was obviously not calculated to appear freeswinging assault on Minow and the Commissioners who frame and effect the stiffened regulatory posture toward the programming responsibilities of licensees. But, a deft pensman can hurl an insult, carried on such innocuous-sounding phrases, as to be unrecognizable for what it is.

The only person to object to the following line was Ashbrook Bryant. Either Minow didn't think it was directed at him, or he chose to ignore it. At any rate, no general umbrage was taken.

Stanton said:

"In this connection (referring to the urge to force others to see the light as you see it), I confess that there has occurred to me the possibility that the more sophiticated who are restless with the type of entertainment that appeals to others may need a rededication of faith in that hopeful experiment that is our democracy."

It wouldn't be unreasonable to assume this was aimed at Minow, who is admittedly both sophisticated and restless with present-day tv fare. Also, he is a liberal, of the Stevensonian school, and, when one stops to ponder it, to insinuate in so many words that the dedicated perennial coeds and others out to reform tv are anti-democratic is a high magnitude insult.

Bryant showed reaction to Stanton's statement by questioning the CBS exec about a segment of the so-called Wriston Report which rapped the quality of tv programming. Bryant wanted to know whether the panel of notables who signed the report and thereby endorsed the criticism of tv were, in Stanton's opinion, in need of a refresher course in democracy.

In obvious pique over the leading nature of the question, Stanton snapped back to Bryant that he believed in exposing the public to varied fare. But, he added: "I don't think we should ram it down their throats."

A few questions later, he reiterated in somewhat stronger language the philosophy outlined in his opening statement by telling Commissioner Robert Bartley: "I do not believe we have the responsibility of taking one particular field and cramming it down their throats."

Commissioner Frederick W. Ford told Stanton he was "somewhat shocked" to hear the latter testify that the Commission's July, 1960, Programming Report harbored seeds of censorship. Ford assured the CBS prexy that this just wasn't so, that the report simply sought to require broadcasters to make an effort to determine the needs of their communities. As long as the effort was done seriously and in good faith, the Commission would be satisfied. Stanton told the Commissioner he was "relieved" to hear this interpretation of the report.

Minow did not contest with any degree of vigor Stanton's laissez-faire programming philosophy.

The Chairman maintained the tenor of his opening statement which averred: "Neither this inquiry, nor our policy statement of July 1960, nor any of our recommendations to the Congress, contemplate any invasion by the Commision of the programming functions of the broadcast.

"The Communications Act wisely forbids censorship, and this is the way it should be in a free society. We are determined that it shall so remain.

"We are equaly determined that every broadcaster to whom we issue a license shall make an honest, sincere effort to serve the public interest—and in these hearings we seek ways to assure that every broadcaster shall be able to fulfil this grave responsibility."

Minow followed up with this praise for broadcasters: "This inquiry has been an outstanding example of cooperation between industry and government . . ."

New Nielsens: Season's Pattern Set

Just like last year, the national Nielsens for January (first two weeks) reflect the viewing pattern established for the season. And on the basis of this pattern NBC's "Wagon Train" (which moves to ABC next season) is the No. 1 show of the season. Other highlights of the key report: Of the Top 15 shows, CBS has 10; NBC five. On half-hour wins, CBS is out in front with 24, NBC with 17 and ABC with nine. CBS is shown winning five nights of the week; NBC two nights. Average audience rating is spelled out as follows: CBS 20.1; NBC 19.0; ABC 16.4.

Here are the Top 15:

|---|---|
| Wagon Train (NBC) | 32.6 |
| Gunsmoke (CBS) | 31.8 |
| Perry Mason (CBS) | 31.1 |
| Bonanza (NBC) | 29.5 |
| Garry Moore (CBS) | 29.4 |
| Dr. Kildare (NBC) | 29.1 |
| Hazel (NBC) | 28.8 |
| Red Skelton (CBS) | 27.7 |
| Defenders (CBS) | 27.2 |
| Ed Sullivan (CBS) | 27.0 |
| Rawhide (CBS) | 26.5 |
| Sing Along Mitch (NBC) | 26.5 |
| Candid Camera (CBS) | 25.4 |

Radio Jingles' $3,000,000 Tune & All Tailored to Station Needs

Production and syndication of radio station identification jingles has become big business. Total sales of such jingles jangled to a total tnue of more than $3,000,000 during 1961, according to key sales execs, and may hit $3,500,000 during '62. Growth has been most pronounced during the past year and a half and reflects the healthy state of radio syndication— in contrast to vidfilm syndication.

Tremendous increase in use by the AM'ers of station jingles stems almost directly from decreased radio web service. Stations which had for years depended to a major extent on the networks for programming found they now had to develop their own sound images in competition with other local stations. One of the major gimmicks used in creating such station individuality became the jingle. Fact that all jingle packages are sold on an exclusive-to-you-in-your market basis means that the stations acquired a distinctive musical identification—short and catchy—which no competing station can use and the big scramble in radio today is for a particular, specialized "sound image."

Station jingles derived, actually, from commercial jingles, generally credited as teeing off in the early 40's when Ginger Johnson and Alan Kent introed the Pepsi-Cola jingle. Later, indies such as WNEW, New York, came up with their own briefie musical i.d.'s, on the theory that if a jingle can sell and identify a product, same goes for stations. Web affiliates, however, didn't feel they needed them until web service all but disappeared.

The use by the stations of jingles has broadened considerably. Originally, they were used virtually exclusively at regular station break intervals. Now, however, the jingles are completely interwoven with a station's music programming. Jingles are used to

NBC-TV Fri. Plot: Mitch and Paar

NBC-TV has a new plan for Friday, which has "Sing Along With Mitch" moving, as reported earlier, into the 8:30 hour, and the latest word is that Jack Paar will assume the 10-11 p.m. spot.

Hence, the NBC-TV Friday sked in '62-'63 would read, unless there are more changes, this way: "International Showtime," 7:30, Mitch Miller 8:30, "Vive Judson McKay," 9:30, Jack Paar at 10.

"McKay," now in pilot form, is a telefilmed half-hour situation comedy set in Paris. It was produced with NBC coin by Don McGuire, who makes "Hennessey" over at CBS-TV.

Yale Roe's ABC Slot

Yale Roe, formerly assistant general sales manager of KGO-TV, ABC's San Francisco o&o, has been named assistant daytime sales manager for the web.

Roe has been with ABC since 1950, working at WBKB-TV, the Chicago o&o, and WABC-TV, New York, as well as San Francisco.

No Dearth Of Clients for ABC Feature Films

Initial straws in the wind indicate a solid economic base for ABC-TV's run with feature films on Sunday nights starting April 8. All the bankrollers of the two shows knocked off by the films, "Bus Stop" and "Adventures in Paradise," have bought into the films and additional advertisers are now in the process of being lined up.

Returning advertisers include American Chicle, Block Drug, Brillo, Brown & Williamson, Ted Bates, International Latex, Johnson & Johnson, Thomas Leeming, Lestoil, Miles Laboratories and Polk-Miller. Network sales execs said that advertisers are showing little resistance to films. In fact, the aura of quality and star names are shaping into powerful sales tools.

While ABC-TV is still committed to regular programming after the run of United Artists films is over in September, there's still a definite undercurrent in favor of the retention of the feature film format. NBC-TV will be running with feature films on Saturday nights for next season and, depending on the pix-on-tv rating pull, there's a good chance that there'll be a weekend of network films for the 1962-63 span.

And if that comes to pass, there's expectation that CBS-TV may also try films to bolster its Thursday night, which has been the weakest link in its schedule.

All-Star TV Gab

The N.Y. chapter of the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences has lined up "an all-star cast" to discuss the "Future of Television in New York." Forum will take place Thursday (6) at the Academy's 40th St. offices.

On the panel will be producers Herb Brodkin, Gene Burr, Herb Leonard, Norman Jewison (who is also a director), CBS veep Mike Dann and AFTRA exec secretary Don Conaway.

SOME FOOTNOTES ON 'WAGON TRAIN'

The current intramural schemings and plottings attendence the projection of network tv schedules frequently contribute more fascinating footnotes than the actual airing of the shows themselves.

Take, for example, the "Wednesday night story" as it relates to next season—certainly one of the more exciting (to the trade) episodes in the whole range of jockeying for position between NBC, CBS and ABC.

When, a couple months back, ABC negotiated with Revue Productions for the inheritance next season of NBC's hottest tv hour, namely "Wagon Train," for something like $20,000,000 and covering a two-year span, it was to all intents the tv coup of the year. Even as recently as this week, with the release of the new national Nielsens—perhaps the key ratings of the season since these are the Nielsens that reflect the '61-'62 pattern—the "Wagon Train" acquisition took on even more glamorous overtones with "WT" in undisputed No. 1 position. Add to this the fact that ABC will be perpetuating the habit continuity with its continued slotting of the show Wednesdays 7:30 to 8:30.

But suddenly the picture takes on a slightly different hue, cueing some doubts in some quarters as to whether "Wagon Train" will prove to be the gravy train that was initially anticipated.

For things have been happening since ABC made its deal with Revue for a new season of "Wagon Train's" plus guaranteeing the playoff of some 180 "WT" reruns that were formerly shown on NBC. For one thing, NBC went to the selfsame Revue shop and, in a daring programming venture, negotiated for a new series of westerns, this one of 90-minute length, "The Virginian," to be thrown smack into competition against ABC's "Wagon Train." (Whether "Virginian" can withstand that built-in audience pull of "WT" remains to be seen, but in any event NBC is protecting itself with only a 13-week firm deal on "Virginian," permitting it to back off if "WT" duplicates on ABC its current success story). But should "Virginian" take off as a potentially hot entry, ABC's got a problem on its hands. "Virginian," incidentally, will be shot in color, at $200,000 per episode.

Secondly, from the looks of things, ABC seems to be having some trouble with its affiliates in clearing post-11:15 p.m. periods for "Train" reruns along with replays of WB's "Roaring 20s" and "Maverick" (and the whole economics of that $20,000,000 deal rests on finding good rerun time). Warners wants to know pronto whether ABC-TV plans to go ahead with the latenight stripping (or else the major will go into syndication with the two shows). ABC-TV thus is on a deadline in convincing both affiliated stations and advertisers to go along with a post-11:15 telefilm show. Some advertisers say it'll require a small miracle for ABC to consummate the latenight exposure, although ABC sources late last week said there was a degree of new hope.

To make up the vast guaranteed expenditure on replays of "Train," ABC-TV has to get multiple exposure out of those reruns. Without the three-a-week of a latenight deal, the web will probably be hard pressed to amortize the cost of the replays. True, ABC can always show them daytime, weekday hours, but the cost of advertising on ABC-TV daytime is relatively low, maybe too low, to really compensate ABC for the trouble of exposing "Train."

An alternative that ABC is reportedly considering is exposure of "WT" as Sunday-6:30 replays, just before ABC-TV begins its prime time sked. But that's only one exposure.

There are no dull moments around ABC these days.

CBS-TV Spells Out '61-'62 Program Casualties in Prepping New Sked; Thurs. Night Gets Real Slugging

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Program casualties on the CBS-TV schedule which will not be around for next season now encompasses "Hennesey," "Alvin & the Chipmunks," Gertrude Berg, the entire Thursday night lineup other than "CBS Reports;" plus "Father of the Bride" and a few others.

As the web begins plotting its '62-'63 course, another highlight is the possibility of the toprated Red Skelton show being expanded from a half-an-hour to a full hour.

The checkerboard movement of shows in time slots is far from set at this stage, but the weakies on the current CBS-TV schedule are discernible and their "no future" status is being tagged.

Thursday night has proven out to be the weakest rating night of the week, spelling fini in '62-'63 to "Frontier Circus," "Bob Cummings Show," "Tell It To Groucho," (midseason replacement), and Gertrude Berg. "CBS Reports" will be the only show to stay, with the prestige pubaffairs series probably remaining in its current time slot, from 10 to 11 p.m., in spite of an initial flirtation to move it to 7:30 p.m. next season.

The day-by-day analysis for next season finds "General Electric Theatre" out of its Sunday 9 to 9:30 p.m. berth, with the remainder of the Sunday program schedule remaining intact, although there's been some talk of moving Jack Benny to Tuesday night.

"Ben Casey," ABC-TV hit medico show, has taken the rating stardust out of "Hennesey," "Casey," in effect, has slugged "Hennesey" out of the running for '62-'63. Monday nights next season will find "Window on Main Street" gone (see separate story), and "I've Got A Secret" moved up from its 10:30 berth, giving the web an hour to fill from 10 to 11 p.m. All other Monday night entries look secure.

"Password" and "Ichabod" will be shelved from the Tuesday night lineup. Web plans to continue its reruns of "Gunsmoke," titled

Prime Time

London, Jan. 30.

The lament by Prime Minister Harold Macmillan, when speaking at the BBC-TV Jubilee Dinner last November, that his official duties had made it impossible for him to see "Lenny the Lion" on television, may be rectified during the Easter holidays.

Ventriloquist Terry Hall has offered to bring his dummy to the Premier's home during the vacation, and put on a show for the Prime Minister and his grandchildren.

NBC-TV Locks In 13 as Holdovers; Fewest Casualties

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

NBC-TV has picked 13 shows as certain holdovers next season. Web's program board in N.Y. marked the secret ballot as its own personal index in laying out next fall's schedule. Shows pencilled in for renewals are:

"Saturday Night at the Movies," "Car 54, Where Are You?" "Bonanza," "Laramie" (already renewed); "Hazel," "Dr. Kildare," Disney's World of Color," "Sing Along with Mitch," "International Show Time," "Dick Powell Show," (already renewed); Perry Como, Dinah Shore and "87th Precinct."

While the list is incomplete, future ratings will determine other survivors. Web's programmers indicate that four or five others will lock in their time for next season. Trade observers have estimated that NBC will have the least cancellations of the three networks, with ABC-TV the most.

Order for 32 new first-run "Laramie" segs involves an estimated $4,000,000 in production coin. The John Champion-produced series also received an order for four additional segs to finish out this semester with 32 installments. Original order for this season was for 28 segments.

It will be the fourth season for the hourlong oater, which will again be lensed in color, as it was this semester.

"Dick Powell Show" order is for 30 first-runs and 20 repeats, same as this season. Production on the new product begins in February or March, with the first telefilm or two to star Charles Boyer, who is partnered with prexy Powell and David Niven in the telefilmery.

More than $5,000,000 in production coin is involved in the new deal.

Upgrading of German TV Market Cues Brit. Demand on Script Fees

London, Jan. 30.

TV and Screen Writers' Guild has warned writers to watch out for clauses in contracts concerning sale of telerecordings to German stations. According to the Guild, U. K. commercial contractors have begun inserting "German rights" paragraphs into pacts under which they need pay scripters only 25% of the original fee if his taped play, is sold to German tv interests.

Latter are becoming an increasingly good market for British authors, says the Guild, and fees offered for scripts compare favorably with those secured in the U.K. Therefore, the writers' union has instructed members not to accept less than 100% of the original fee for sale of top to Germany.

GE Hr. Anthology To Thurs. NBC?

There is no deal yet, but NBC-TV is reported close to getting that. General Electric weekly hourlong anthology for its 10 to 11 p.m. Thursday berth. Web and BBDO are now involved in dickers.

NBC plans to move Mitch Miller (see separate story) out of the time period. GE evidently wants the hour slot, now that it can't get its weekly Sunday half-hour renewed for next season at CBS-TV, because of the strong leadin content, "Dr. Kildare" followed by "Hazel," both high-raters. (Moreover, it is now possible that CBS will keep "CBS Reports" Thursday at 10, in which case, GE might have the advantage of facing off vs. a quality stanza but one that has not in that time period been much of a Nielsen-puller.)

LEVER & GF EYE STANLEY HOLLOWAY

Lever Bros. is contemplating a half-hour situationer for next season called "Higgins," done out of Screen Gems and fronted by Britisher Stanley Holloway. While no deal is set, the master plan (shared with General Foods by Lever) is to use the half-hour 8:30 to 9 on Mondays over CBS-TV.

The two bankrollers first thought of putting a new Lucille Ball half-hour in that Monday slot, but now they want to move it to 8:30 Tuesday on CBS-TV.

Kleig-Lighted TV Spec Buildup Launches Lerner & Loewe's Setup

On its first venture into television packaging, Alfred Productions is giving a Hollywood-type advance buildup to its NBC-TV show, "The Broadway of Lerner & Loewe," due Feb. 11 as a special for Chrysler. In tandem with the automotive company, Alfred's general manager and the show's exec producer, Norman Rosemont, has been staging special parties for the press in 10 key cities with two of the show's stars, Robert Goulet and Julie Andrews, also making the rounds where possible.

The Alfred outfit, which sold the show to Chrsyler for $300,000 on a virtual non-profit basis in light of the steep tabs for Maurice Chevalier, Richard Burton, Stanley Holloway, Miss Andrews and Goulet, will be reaping a harvest from the show's anticipated impact on the b.o. of the two current Lerner & Loewe Broadway shows, "My Fair Lady" and "Camelot." Previous exposures of music and talent from the L&L legiters on Ed Sullivan's show invariably resulted in sharply increased boxoffice activity. Alfred is owned by Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe whose music will be the basis of the Chrysler special.

Rosemont said his main job as exec producer of the show began after the special was put on color tape in December. That job was to sell it to the audience with as much showmanship as possible. As part of the buildup, Rosemont has hired Sardi's Restaurant, the theatrical crowd's hangout, for a black tie press party on the night of the special. A flock of color tv sets will be on hand for the show's tune-in.

Chrysler is distributing 250,000 16-page photo brochures which are tying the show with the Chrysler line. The brochure was taken from an advertising supplement in Town & Country mag. Chrysler and its agency, Leo Burnett, gave Lerner and Loewe complete freedom in its production of the show, a switch from the row which they had with General Motors three years ago when the idea of the special was first broached.

Next television project for Alfred will be a tv version of the Lerner & Loewe show, "Brigadoon," in association with MGM-TV. This is being projected as a 90-minute show for the 1962-63 season, if it can be sold.

CBS-TV 'Window' May Get Reprieve

The seesaw conflict about continuing "Window on Main Street" on CBS-TV at press time seems to favor continuing the Robert Young starrer for the remainder of the season. Web, with the approval of alternate sponsors, may shift the half-hour series to another time slot.

Slotted on Mondays at 8:30, the half-hour series, sponsored alternately by Scott Paper and Toni, has been a rating disappointment Skein, sold via Screen Gems, had been an expensive property and a major disappointment of the season. Hope was that it would duplicate the success of "Father Knows Best," made by the same Young-Rodney team.

In a temporary switch of scheduling on Thursday nights, starting Feb. 1, CBS-TV will switch "Frontier Circus" from 7:30 to 8:30 to 8 to 9 p.m. Moving into the 7:30 spot is the "New Bob Cummings Show." It now is occupying the 7:30 berth. When the shift occurs, Vick Chemical will pick up full sponsorship of Cummings for the remainder of its run.

Cummings is due to go off March 8. "Oh, My Bells," unexposed episodes of "Brenner," are among the properties being considered as a replacement.

Kip's Cleffing

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Kip Walton will baton the CBS-TV series, "Clear Horizon."

Skein is due to start airing Feb. 26.

Sunshine Biscuit Buy

Sunshine Biscuit is back in tv and its a daytime buy, natch.

Company, which has been exclusively in magazines and newspapers for some time, returns today (31) with quarter hours in NBC-TV's daytime quiz shows, "The Price Is Right" and "Truth or Consequences."

Sunshine agency Cunningham & Walsh says the buys are an attempt to capture a high percentage of the younger housewives.

Packagers Love Those TV Repeats

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

The prospect of extensive network buys of repeats this year is taking program packagers off the financial hook even where there will be no renewals for next season. For the packagers, the summer repeats represent the difference between profit and loss for first-year shows which are frequently sold below the cost of production of a new episode.

Economics of a high-rated new show, such as "Dr. Kildare," is instructive. MGM-TV is bringing in new episodes at a few thousand dollars above the $110,000 price being paid by NBC-TV. However, the repeats will be bringing in around $20,000 per week and this year may run from 13 to 26 shows. Even after paying out around $5,000 on residual rights on the repeats, MGM-TV will be left with a good profit on the overall "Kildare" series. While "Kildare" is being renewed for next year, same economic factors are operating on repeats for non-renewed shows.

Another plus factor for MGM-TV on a click show like "Kildare" is the overseas sale. It's grossing around $20,000 weekly, of which NBC is taking a slice of around 40% for its handling of the foreign distribution.

ZIV-UA'S 'HOWIE,' OTHER PILOTS ROLL

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Pilots rolling off Hollywood's tv assembly line include "Howie," for Ziv-UA, starring Will Hutchins, who once starred in Warner Bros. "Sugarfoot" series. Bill Asher is producer-director.

"Side of the Angels," a "Twilight Zone" spinoff starring Carol Burnett and Jesse White, produced by Buck Houghton. If it sells, White will star in the series.

Filmways is turning out a pfiot starring Ricki Starr as a wrestler. Al Simon is exec producer, and George Burns, who owns a chunk of the "Mr. Ed" series, also has a piece of this action.

"Whatever You Do, Don't Panic," half-hour comedy being produced by Bob Finkel and John Hess for Revue.

In addition, Warners' upcoming "Bomb Aboard — Call the FBI" spec for ABC-TV may also be a pilot for an FBI telepix series. Stanley Niss is producing.

Berle's Spec Cast

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Milton Frome, straight man for Milton Berle in show comic did for NBC-TV years ago, joins Berle in spec he's taping for March 9 airing.

Previously set were Jack Benny, Lena Horne, Janis Paige and Laurence Harvey.

8 More 'Bullwinkles'

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

"The Bullwinkle Story," animation series on NBC-TV, has received a renewal for eight more segments, to round out the season, restoring a cutback ordered earlier in the semester. As a result, producer Jay Ward has rehired five of eight employes he discharged recently.

Series goes into reruns this summer, and will be on through Sept. 30. Ward and Bill Scott are coproducers.

'Let Freedom Ring' May Get CBS Reprise

"Let Freedom Ring," the hour special featuring the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, may be picked up again for a CBS-TV rerun by American Motors Corp. Web and American Motors, the original sponsor, have held talks looking toward that eventuality.

Special was telecast Dec. 31 and featured Laraine Day, Richard Boone, Dan O'Herlihy and Howard Keel.

Schreiber to Get A Closed Hearing For MCA Probe

Los Angeles, Jan. 30.

U.S. District Court has ordered Music Corp. of America and Taft Schreiber, veepee, to appear before the Federal Communications Commission to testify and to produce books, papers and documents relating to the Government's probe of tv programming practices. Order signed by Federal Judge Leon R. Yankwich, however, "suggested" that the hearings be held in closed session.

U.S. Attorney Francis C. Whelan, who revealed the U.S. court decision, said it was now up to the FCC to decide on the time and place of appearance for MCA and Schreiber.

Action grew out of Schreiber's refusal to testify in public upon certain matters at FCC hearings Oct. 21, 1960, and March 6, 1961. At that time he indicated that he would be willing to answer all questions at a closed session and with the understanding that his answers were kept confidential.

In his decision, Judge Yankwich reviewed the power of the FCC in making investigations and concluded that the inquiry involved in this proceeding is, within the investigatory powers of the commission.

"However," the judge said, "I am of the opinion that in view of the well-grounded fears of the respondent that the testimony to be given might result in the disclosure of trade secrets of which competitors might take advantage, it is suggested that the examiner confine attendance at the hearing

WATERBURY STATION FACES A GOVT. RAP

Hartford, Jan. 30.

A Waterbury radio station and its president have been charged by the government on three counts of violating federal labor laws.

Cited have been WWCO and Herbert Bloomberg, prexy and treasurer of the station. Bloomberg has been ordered to appear in Federal Court here on Feb. 5 to answer to charges that the station failed to pay overtime, falsified records and failed to keep records.

Asst. U.S. Atty. James D. O'Connor filed the charges which claim station failed to pay time and a half wages for overtime to 16 employees in a Sept. 5, 1959 to July 27, 1961 period.

Charges also claim that station kept false records on time worked by 10 of its employees. Government also charges that the station violated provision of the Fair Employment Standards Act of 1938.

Author, Author!

Complaint growing among Author Guild members in N.Y. is that U.S. magazines are cutting down the type-size of bylines, not selling the writer but the title or idea. In the good days author billing was the whole essence of magazine ballyhoo.

Then Kathleen Norris or Sax Rohmer on the cover moved an extra 100,000 on the newsstands, its recalled.

French-U.S. TV-Telephonic Link Being Projected for End Of '62

Paris, Jan. 30.

France and the U.S. hope to have a video and telephonic space link by the end of '62. Two identical stations are being built in each country to focus and track special satellites which would enable them to eventually have 600 communication lines.

Stations are now under construction in Rumford, Maine, and in a small Brittany town in France, Plumeur-Boudou. Both will be identical and have immense glass enclosed antennas for tracking purposes. At first one satellite will be used and later, it is hoped, a chain of them which will replace each other and keep contact continuous rather than intermittent.

The American National Aeronautics Space Administration and the French National Telecommunications Study Center are working on this project. At first Yank satellites will be used but then French hope to have their own involved in the setup. French feel that U.S. advances in space call for all work to complement and follow theirs rather than going out on one's own.

French asked Common Mart members to cooperate but most are going at it on their own. French feel this is wrong and may make it harder eventually to tie up the systems. Now, they feel, is the time to act the pupil to U.S. advances and only later go out on their own.

The antenna is being shipped from the U. S. to France and will be 177 feet long and 94 feet high. It will be enclosed in a 210-foot glass dome. It is hoped that an interchange of video programs and telephone and telegraph messages are for the very near future.

NBC-TV's Links Loot

All NBC-TV coverage of major golf tourneys in the next several months is SRO.

Ford, Humble Oil and Wilson Sporting Goods purchased the pieces of the web's television coverage. Wilson owns all of the Palm Springs classic on Sunday (4), half of the Tourney of Champions on May 6 and half of the June 16 National Open. Ford is bankrolling the Thunderbird tourney on June 10, and Humble has the pieces in the Tourney of Champs and the National that Wilson does not own.

CBS Radio Pacing Big Band Feeds

Who said the big band days are over? In terms of pickups, they're as strong as ever on CBS Radio, the web feeding the "live" band broadcasts to affils for sustaining programming, usually at nighttime

During '61, CBS Radio ran up an impressive total of 1,050 dance band programs accounting for 500 broadcasting hours. Under the web's deal with the American Federation of Musicians, no commercials are allowed in the programs. For the new '62 year, the big band feed by the web will continue in full force.

Currently, CBS has wires in the Hotel Roosevelt, Hotel Taft, Pierre Hotel and the Embers in New York; London House in Chicago, Peabody Hotel, Memphis, Queen Elizabeth Hotel, Montreal; Roosevelt Hotel, New Orleans and El Mirado, Palm Springs. During the year CBS covers the seasonal spots such as the Steel Pier in Atlantic City; Cavalier Beach Club, Virginia Beach and Freedomland, N.Y. During the year, net places wires in the Waldorf Astoria, Park-Sheraton and Statler-Hilton Hotels, N.Y. Roseland Ballroom and other dance centers.

CBS, moving along with the times, divides its service between the bands dispensing dansapation and the new, progressive combos whose output is designed primarily for listening.

Hard core of the terps brigade are the dyed-in-the-wool veterans such as Guy Lombardo, Vincent Lopez, Stanley Melba, Freddie Martin, Russ Morgan, Les Brown, Eddy Howard and other oldtimers. Music for listening brigade includes such younger faces as Jonah Jones, Peter Nero, Don Shirley, Eddie Layton's organ trio, Dorothy Donegan, Joe Bushkin, etc.

Affil acceptance of the band programming is good, varying from 40 to 100 affils hooking up.

U.S. TELEPIX IN HOT BRIT. SHUFFLE

London, Jan. 30

Despite recent changes to its dispute-hit schedules, Associated-Rediffusion, midweek commercial tv outlet for London, is switching shows around yet again. The hour-long "Gunsmoke" has been bumped in favor of "Rawhide" in the Friday at 7:30 p.m. slot. And "Naked City" bows in the old "Rawhide" time of Monday, 9:15 p.m.

Major also replaces "Route 66" with "Ben Casey" from Thurs. (1) in the 9:45 p.m. hole. Moves haven't interfered with overall pattern of weekday viewing, however. A-R still runs three hot U.S. vidfilms in weekday prime time, same as BBC-TV.

"Naked City" has been put in to do battle with BBC's new drama skein "Studio 4" and has the advantage of kicking off 10 minutes earlier. "Casey" comes up against the competition's strong O.B. spot while "Rawhide" matches "Discovery" and "The Defenders."

The "Rawhide"-"Defenders" clash (although the former starts 30-minutes earlier) represents the only point on both networks' schedule where U.S. vidfilms meet.

Espanola TV In 9 P.M. Kid Curfew

Madrid, Jan. 30.

Nine p.m. is deadline time for all young people under the age of 16, according to official word from Television Espanola. All programs before this hour are strictly confectioned for family tastes. After nine TVE made it known that its programs would include "adult only" telefare.

Television authorities are asking parents to obseve these norms scrupulously but are making doubly sure this rule is observed by flash insert frames calling the elders' attention to telecasting switch from family to adult themes.

BOB WOLFF GETS NBC SPORTS NOD

Bob Wolff, who covered the Washington Senators for 15 years and its successor the Minnesota Twins for one, is quitting the Twins to replace Lindsey Nelson as play-by-play announcer on NBC-TV's baseball "Game of the Week" this spring. He'll team up with Joe Caragiola for the Saturday and Sunday afternoon games, with Caragiola handling color.

Nelson quit last week as a sportscaster and as assistant sports director to Tom Gallery to become announcer for the new N.Y. Mets on WOR-TV. Gallery has not picked an administrative successor to Nelson.

NBC will carry a 50-game sked.

'Ozzie' All Locked Up For 11th TV Season

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

"The Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet, one of tv's hardiest series, received a renewal for next season over the weekend, to insure its 11th season on tv.

ABC-TV gave the greenlight and producer-director-star Ozzie Nelson immediately began preparations to film five segments for next year as soon as the 30 first-runs of this semester are finished by the end of February.

Including its radio run, the series will begin its 19th consecutive season next fall.

SG: RED HOT CELLULOID SHOP

Popularity vs Circulation

The January Nielsen pocketpiece, which pretty much sizes up who did what to whom this season, pinpoints anew a recurring question: should programming be evaluated solely on circulation, or should popularity figures get a better shake at the Madison Ave. dice? The all-encompassing national Nielsens (reflecting circulation) gives the best of it to CBS, which is out in front on number of toprated shows, half-hour wins, nights of the week, etc., with NBC in No. 2 position and ABC running a poor third.

But encased within the same pocketpiece is the 50-market standing of the networks (reflecting popularity of programs) and revealing what happens when the three networks are competing with one another and when ABC is not being short-changed on the nosecount by being locked out of such two-station markets as Syracuse, Grand Rapids, Rochester, etc. On the 50-market standings for the second week of January, ABC gets the edge with 19.3 against NBC's 19.0 and CBS' 18.9. (And the 24-market Nielsen appraisal for the week ending Jan. 21 confirms the 50-market figures, with average evening ratings for all commercial programs giving ABC 20.1; NBC 19.5 and CBS 18.6).

Understandably, CBS and NBC want no part of the 50-market or 24-market rundowns, contending that "circulation is what counts and that's what Madison Ave. is buying." And there's no question but that a large segment of Madison Ave. agrees with this NBC-CBS philosophy.

On the other hand it is ABC's contention that there is seeping into Madison Ave. consciousness a growing awareness of popularity ratings which evaluate the three-network competition and doesn't penalize the web for spectrum shutouts.

W. Germany's 'Get Neuss' as TV Murder Series Invites Bedlam

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, Jan. 30.

Probably the most sensational series of films ever to cross the West German television screen—a six-part cliffhanger murder mystery titled "Der Halstuchmoerder" (The Neckerchief Murders) have just ended, with a tremendous squabble that has undoubtedly meant publicity for all concerned.

The series, by 49-year-old murder mystery television writer Francis Durbridge, was seen by close to half of West Germany's population during its 15-day run (with one part shown every two or four nights).

And during the tense 35 minutes of the program, the results were disaster for anyone who tried to get a taxi, theatres and stage performances were empty, telephones and doorbells went unanswered.

A Hamburg theatre-owner protested that his first-run screening of a Gina Lollobrigida film played to nearly empty seats, solely on the nights when the murder was performing on the television screen, and in Duesseldorf, Dortmund, Cologne and Hanover, the taxi drivers took 35 minute breaks and headed for the neighborhood restaurants with television, so that it was nearly impossible to get a cab — and in the radio cabs in Frankfurt, the few drivers on duty were given a report every few minutes of the way the drama was progessing.

The city of Kiel cancelled a performance of the operetta "Blue Mask," because it coincided with a part of the television murder series and presale of tickets was nearly nil. And the city parliament of Kiel also tabled some business in order to adjourn in time for

CBS-TV's Daytime Pillsbury Windfall

Pillsbury and CBS-TV daytime seem to be going steady. Pillsbury starts a new cycle of CBS-TV daytime buys, giving up, at the same time, its buys on NBC-TV. Sponsor pulls out NBC-TV daytime after March.

On CBS-TV, Pillsbury for another 13 week-cycle will ride with alternate quarter hours on "Love of Life," "As the World Turns," "Password," "Millionaire," "Secret Storm," and "Edge of Night." Outfit also has weekly sponsorship of "House Party."

NBC-TV, which had been a non-basic buy for the sponsor, will lose Pillsbury coin on five shows. Sponsor has alternate week quarter hours on "Concentration," "Young Dr. Malone," "Loretta Young" and "Jan Murray."

All State Insurance Coin to 'Defenders'

All State Insurance will bankroll an alternate half hour of CBS-TV's Saturday night hour, "The Defenders" beginning with the new season.

New sponsor takes over the segment sponsored this season by Kimberly Clark, which is pulling out of the courtroom drama's second season.

Brit. Equity, Still In TV Deadlock, Claims 'Breach'

London, Jan. 30.

British Actors' Equity representatives are today (Tues.) meeting the Trades Union Committee of the Parliamentary Labor Party (chaired by George Brown, M.P.) to ascertain whether the four major commercial tv contractors are in breach of the TV Act. Move springs out of the small companies' refusal to reply to Equity's proposals for separate regional agreements.

Equity holds the view that some local stations may well want to negotiate on the union's latest

What Kind of Day Has It Been? A Day TWA Moved In on McCaffrey News

After 10 years First National City Bank (of N.Y.) has given up its stranglehold on sponsorship of Channel 4's "11th Hour News" with John K. M. McCaffrey. Bank owned all five nights of the 11 p.m. newscast throughout the years, but has finally decided to give up at least two of the five nights beginning next month.

Trans World Airlines immediately moved in and picked up the Tuesday and Thursday McCaffrey telecasts being vacated by the banking house. For years, other N.Y. sponsors have tried to move in on the news strip, but First National held firm, even though WNBC-TV would like to have seen the show spread around a bit more. It took the increased cost of the McCaffrey show (about doubled in six or seven years) to change the bank's mind about keeping the whole kaboodle.

TWA moves in the first time on Feb. 20.

ALL THINGS POINT TO BANNER YEAR

By ART WOODSTONE

Screen Gems is generally believed to have in its next fiscal count a good opportunity to surpass by millions of dollars its $55,821,052 gross of last year. It's also expected to impove on its net income of $2,665,000 for the fiscal year that ended last July, all of which makes the former Columbia Pictures telefilm division the hottest tv celluloid shop in the country, save perhaps for the giant Revue Productions. (SG is now a separate cargo rate entity, with majority stock control owned by Columbia.)

Screen Gems, which became independent of Columbia just a year ago, presently has eight network programs on the air, accounting for five hours of actual programming a week. For the 1962-1963, SG is practically assured of having six of the eight programs back on the air, which, if nothing else, is something of a track record for dependability.

These six returnees total four hours of weekly production, so that all SG seems to have to do at the moment is replace the two half-hour series that are likely to get axed with two more half-hours or, theoretically, with one 60-minute series. Getting that extra hour on the air next season seems also to be guaranteed, if anything in the frantic tv business can ever be guaranteed.

SG's "Empire," an hourlong pilot that isn't even finished, seems to have a good hold on a Tuesday night NBC-TV slot (either fore or aft of the Dick Powell anthology out of rival Four Star Productions). There are no fewer than eight major bankrollers interested in "Empire," and, with NBC apparently behind this SG project it looks like a shoo-in.

Since network sales (and national spot) provided the bulk of SG's nearly $56,000,000 gross, things therefore take on an immediately rosy hue for the house.

'62-'63 Scorecard

SG is expected to have the following six shows renewed next season: CBS' "Route 66," an hour, and the half-hour "Dennis the Menace," NBC's new half-hour hit, "Hazel," and three ABC shows, the hourlong "Naked City," and half-hours "The Flintstones" and "Donna Reed Show."

Slated for dumping as of last week were ABC's new SG additions "The Hathaways" and "Top Cat." This week things look no better for "Hathaways," but there is said to be fresh hope for "Top Cat." The latter is being mulled for a shift from its present 8 p.m. starting time back to a 7:30 opener, perhaps on Saturday nights.

Even if both "Hathaways" and "Top Cat" do get axed and "Empire," in one of those not unusual twists of tv fate, never gets on, should do well. Company is doing two pilots for next year with CBS coin, "APO 923" and "Defiance County," both hours. It also is said to be a very hot prospect this week at NBC with a half-hour edition of "Tom Sawyer." (Kraft wants the remake of the classic at 7 p.m. Sundays over NBC). Moreover, there are reliable reports that Lever Bros. wants to use a Stanley Holloway-fronted situation between 8:30 and 9 Mondays over CBS-TV (see separate story). Just one of them has to hit to make it fine for SG and chances are more than one of them will get on, which makes it even that much better for the production company.

SG seems also to have the assurances of sponsor Kellogg that three nationally-spotted (each in somewhere near 200 markets) half-hour series for moppets will be back again in '62-'63. Because there is "real big money" in renewal of "Huck Hound," "Quick Draw McGraw" and "Yogi Bear," SG's take is expected to stay up.

That's just the network side of

Lester Cowan's 60-Min. TV Series Based on Ernie Pyle's War Pieces

The wartime writings of the late Scripps-Howard correspondent, Ernie Pyle, are being shaped into a series of one-hour television dramas, titled "Brave Men" under the banner of Lester Cowan Productions. Cowan, who produced the feature pic, "Ernie Pyle, the Story of G.I. Joe," during the last war, has the literary rights under a deal with the Ernie Pyle Foundation which makes scholarship grants out of Pyle's royalties earnings.

Cowan has already been promised full cooperation by the U.S. Defense Department in behalf of the Army, Navy and Air Force. Granting of manpower and technical assistance to Cowan was based on an Depense Dept. memorandum limiting such cooperation to projects which fit in with the national interest. Based upon the recent brouhaha over the use of troops in Darryl F. Zanuck's film production, "The Longest Day," defense officials are carefully screening show biz requests for military assistance to make sure that they are not attempts to drape American flags over a new form of violence. During the last war, incidentally, Cowan was the only Hollywood producer who succeeded in getting approval for the use of regular troops in two of his films, "G.I. Joe" and "Commandos Strike At Dawn."

Cowan will start readying the series immediately upon his return from the Soviet Union where he is setting up a co-production deal with the Russians on Mitchell Wilson's novel, "Meeting At A Far Meridian." Hal Boyle, Associated Press columnist and wartime associate of Pyle, has been hired as adviser for the series. It's being blueprinted as an all-service plug with three male leads portraying Army, Navy and Air Force servicemen.

That's What He Said!

This could be the understatement of the century.

In giving its reason for renewing Jack Benny for next season, State Farm Insurance said "he is America's living symbol of the careful spender. He blends well with our image."

TV & Radio Codes Up for Airing At NAB Board Meet

Washington, Jan. 30.

Reports on expanded radio and television codes and on a study of a broadcasting industry research and training center highlight the agenda of the semi-annual National Assn. of Broadcasters board of directors meeting which got underway this week in Sarasota, Fla.

Robert D. Swezey, director of the NAB's Code authority will deliver the report on operation of the expanded codes.

The special committee's report on the feasibility of the research and training center, a pet project of NAB President LeRoy Collins, will be given by its chairman, Donald H. McGannon, president of Westinghouse Broadcasting Co.

Other agenda items include a broadcasters' goodwill tour of Latin America Feb. 3; the Washington Public Affairs and Editorial-Conference, March 1-2; the annual State Broadcaster Assn., presidents conference in Washington Feb. 28-March 1; the 40th annual NAB convention in Chicago, April 1-4; and a report on the Freedom of Information Committee's activities.

Theme of the 43-member board's closed meeting at the Far Horizons Hotel will be a review of the past year's activities and planning for the future. Clair McCollough of the Steinman Stations in Lancaster, Pa., is board chairman.

The radio and television boards will also hold separate meetings.

Wayne & Schuster Won't Cross Canada Picket Line For $25-a-Plate Benefit

Toronto, Jan. 30.

Wayne & Shuster, comedy toastmasters at the annual $25 per customer dinner on Feb. 1, will not attend the strikebound Royal York Hotel event and have refused to cross the picket lines of the Hotel and Club Employees Union. As spokesman for the Canadian comedy team, Jonny Wayne said that they had accepted the invitation in the hope that the strike would be settled by the date of the dinner but settlement showed no likelihood.

Sponsored by the Sportswriters and Sportscasters Assn. in aid of the Ontario Society for Crippled Children, $25-a-plate annual banquet has raised $24,000 for this year's event but several head-table guests have refused to cross the picket lines of the struck hotel.

In addition to Wayne & Shuster, who've enlivened proceedings for the past two seasons, are Ralph Houk, manager of the New York Yankees; Gene (Big Daddy) Lipscombe of the Pittsburgh Steelers, National Football League; Wilma Randolph Ward, the American runner; and many others in the growing list. The Catholic Church has also entered the controversy with Father John Crowley declining an invitation to say opening prayers at the dinner.

TV & Radio Codes Up for Airing At NAB Board Meet

Washington, Jan. 30.

Reports on expanded radio and television codes and on a study of a broadcasting industry research and training center highlight the agenda of the semi-annual National Assn. of Broadcasters board of directors meeting which got underway this week in Sarasota, Fla.

Robert D. Swezey, director of the NAB's Code authority will deliver the report on operation of the expanded codes.

The special committee's report on the feasibility of the research and training center, a pet project of NAB President LeRoy Collins, will be given by its chairman, Donald H. McGannon, president of Westinghouse Broadcasting Co.

Other agenda items include a broadcasters' goodwill tour of Latin America Feb. 3; the Washington Public Affairs and Editorial-Conference, March 1-2; the annual State Broadcaster Assn., presidents conference in Washington Feb. 28-March 1; the 40th annual NAB convention in Chicago, April 1-4; and a report on the Freedom of Information Committee's activities.

Theme of the 43-member board's closed meeting at the Far Horizons Hotel will be a review of the past year's activities and planning for the future. Clair McCollough of the Steinman Stations in Lancaster, Pa., is board chairman.

The radio and television boards will also hold separate meetings.

Of Top 15 Shows, 11 Are Full Hours

For all the frantic scrounging around by three tv networks for half-hour comedy formats for next season, perhaps the major revelation in the key January Nielsens is that the 60-minute show, whether western, adventure or variety format, "steals the show." By actual count, 11 of the Top 15 shows in the newest National Nielsens are full-hour length (see separate box).

It's true that the remaining four shows of half-hour length (Red Skelton, Candid Camera, Dennis the Menace and Hazel) are geared for laughs, yet it's interesting to note that only one show in the quartet (Hazel) is new to the season.

For all that it's estimated that the bulk of the new entries being projected for '62-'63 are in the 30-minute category with accent on comedy.

Brown & Williamson Coin in 'Judson McKay'

Brown & Williamson, gun-jumping buyer of the network selling season, has bought an alternate half-hour of NBC-TVs new situation comedy, "Viva Judson McKay." It could be the buy that anchored the web's new Friday night lineup for '62-'63 (see separate story).

The new comedy will have the 9:30 p.m. Friday berth behind Mitch Miller and possibly before the new Jack Paar stanza.

Before year's end, B&W had purchased two minutes a week in ABC-TV's "Ben Casey" on a firm 52-week deal beginning with the new season. Cig firm, all via Ted Bates agency, also has renewed ABC's "Naked City" and CBS' "Defenders" and is still shopping.

UA Picks Up Raincheck On Ziv's O'seas Catalog for Bigtime Venture

Ziv-UA, under the aegis of Manny Reiner, for the first time on its own enters the foreign sales field, with a tv product catalog of major proportions.

Heretofore, Ziv-UA operated in the foreign sales field via a franchise agreement with International Television Programs, Inc. That franchise agreement, dating back to 1953, before the acquisition of Zic by United Artists, has been terminated, according to Ziv-UA prexy John L. Sinn.

Reiner has been named v.p. in charge of foreign operations of Ziv-UA. Reiner, who has been v.p. of United Artists Associated, since October, 1960, will direct and supervise sales of all Ziv-UA product abroad and will immediately launch selling campaigns in foreign markets on "Keyhole," "King of Diamonds," "Everglades," and "Ripcord."

Entire Ziv-UA tv lineup of product, numbering 46 individual series and comprising 2,765 episodes, now will be distributed abroad by Ziv-UA. In addition to the series, the new division will handle foreign sales of all product released abroad by United Artists Associated, another subsid of the motion picture company handling features and shorts for tv consumption. Total catalog puts the Ziv-UA foreign operation into the major leagues.

In the foreign field, Ziv-UA will operate with divisional sales managers, working in association with UA foreign offices around the world. This will provide on the spot services for stations, sponsors, advertisers and government broadcast agencies.

Reiner announced the appointment of Herbert R. Banquer as Continental sales manager with headquarters in Paris, and Ira D. Beck in charge of Latin American sales with offices in Mexico City. John C. Hierlihy has been named foreign sales coordinator in N. Y., and Dorothy L. Martin in charge of the contract department.

UAA product includes 800 pre-'50 Warner Bros. pix, 1,400 short subjects and 337 cartoons. In addition, there are 234 reels of "Popeye" cartoons, and several hundred pix from other than WB studios.

Sinn said that Ziv-UA shortly will investigate coproduction deals abroad, hoping to enter into arrangements with leading foreign tv producers.

Reiner will leave shortly for Mexico City for sales confabs with Beck and to set up a Spanish dubbing schedule on forthcoming Latino Ziv-UA releases. Early in March, he will confer with Banquer in Paris, followed by a trip to the Far East.

'Death Valley' In Again

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

U. S. Borax Co. has ordered 13 more "Death Valley Days" segments from Filmaster Productions, and preparation has begun on scripts for the new product.

Filmaster's initial order for this season was for 17 "DVD" episodes. In addition, 10 segments made last semester but not aired were shown this season for the first time. Nat Perrin, Filmaster exec producer, is producer of 'DVD."

SG's $1,500,000 Cartoon Outlay A Syndie Boon

Screen Gems has decided to go ahead and spend approximately $1,500,000 to put out a total of 156 new five-minute cartoons by Hanna-Barbera. The stanzas are meant for first-run syndication.

SG, the distrib in this case, figures there is a sizable market for new animations via syndication even if the rest of the first-run syndie market is terribly shrunken. The 156 pieces are being broken down into groups of 52, one called "Wally Gator," another "Touche Turtle" and the last "Lippy." Naturally, SG syndication has not ruled out large regional deals, but it is likely to depend on station-by-station sales, with the expectation that there is at least one station in every market (particularly three-station cities) where the late afternoon specialty is kidvid and where animation is always in demand.

"Wally," "Touche" and "Lippy" can be tied into half-hours twice weekly or can be shown as inserts in existing kid formats.

TRANS-LUX TV'S 'GUEST SHOT' SERIES

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Trans-Lux TV Corp. has picked up for national syndication a vidpix series made over past three years by newsreel cameraman Rick Spalla and 20th-Fox tv publicist Mike Casey.

Skein, tagged "Guest Shot," focuses on Hollywood celebs at their hobbies—such as Jerry Lewis at work on his electronic gadgetry, Keenan Wynn motorcycle racing, Jayne Mansfield on a health kick, Dan Daily riding to hounds, etc.

Hollywood newsmen Army Archerd, Joe Hyams, Cecil Smith, Vernon Scott and Dan Jenkins narrate various episodes. According to Casey they get $100, plus $150 for buyout of their residual rights, per seg. Casey advises Associated Press' Jim Bacon will join the brigade if he gets boss' okay.

Gen. Insurance Buys Bowling In 44 Markets

Chicago, Jan. 30.

General Insurance Co., through Lennen & Newell, has purchased the syndicated "Championship Bowling" in 44 markets. In each case the buy represents one-quarter sponsorship. Carlings Beer is underwriting a portion of the remaining time in 15 markets, and in most cases the rest is sold to local advertisers.

Sale was made by Walter Schwimmer Inc., which produces and distributes the series. "Bowling" is now in its eighth year of syndication.

Rowswell To Flamingo

New national sales manager of Flamingo Telefilm Sales is Ken Rowswell, formerly with Ziv-UA.

Flamingo prexy Ira Gottlieb says the appointment is due to a recent increase in sales activities for the Buckeye Corp. telefilm distributing wing. Gottlieb had himself been handling syndie sales since a cutback of the sales staff a few months ago.

Syndie Spurt For 'Love That Bob'

MCA TV, putting the off-network "Love That Bob" into syndication, has tallied up some sizeable sales in major markets for the series of 173 half-hour episodes.

Skein has been on the NBC-TV and CBS-TV webs on nighttime and more recently had been used as a daytime strip on ABC-TV.

Now in syndication, skein has been sold to WCBS-TV, N. Y.; WRC-TV, Washington; WBKB, Chicago; KABC, Los Angeles; KONO, San Antonio; KTNT, Tacoma-Seattle; KVAR, Phoenix; WGAN, Portland, Me.; KVOS, Bellingham; WGAL, Lancaster; WVEC, Norfolk-Hampton; KMID, Midland; and KSTP, St. Paul-Minneapolis.

Another off-network property distributed by MCA TV, "M Squad," has been bought by six additional stations and renewed for long periods by two others.

New deals on the Lee Marvin starrer include WPTA, Ft. Wayne; KOIN, Portland, Ore.; WTVJ, Miami; WPSD, Paducah; WJZ-TV, Baltimore; and WKTB, Las Crosse. Renewals came from KPIX, Westinghouse stations in San Francisco, and WISN, Milwaukee.

Denis Mitchell's BBC Documentaries Pacted For Educ'l TV Stations

Chicago, Jan. 30.

National Educational Television network has dealt with BBC-TV for a pair of documentaries produced by Denis Mitchell when he was in the U. S. a year or so ago. One of them, titled "Ed and Frank," will be shown as a special on the 60 NET stations during the month of February; and the other, "Grassroots," filmed by Mitchell in Kentucky, will be shown in March. The Chi station, WTTW, will tee off the first documentary on Feb. 19.

Mitchell made "Ed and Frank" from some footage left over from his controversial U. S. opus, "Chicago: First Impressions of a Great American City." The half-hour film simply juxtaposes the day-to-day lives of two Chicago men, one a suburban-dwelling sales exec, the other a bohemian artist who lost an arm fighting in the Spanish revolution. Each man appears for only a brief moment in the Chicago film, which by the way is still banned in the Windy City because it doesn't portray the city the way the city fathers would like it portrayed.

Mitchell shot "Grassroots" for the BBC after he had lensed his Chicago footage.

TV's Eells-Shaped 'Beany' & 'Hobo,' Orient Shaw Bros.

Veteran broadcast exec Bruce Eells has become somewhat of a loner, and he likes it that way.

The former United Artists Television exec veepee, who left when the film company bought up Ziv, figures the one-man approach to tv packaging and sales has a number of advantages. He has the "Time Out for Beany" success as a strong argument. The longtime local Los Angeles puppet show converted to half-hour animation has a firm two-year network-sponsor contract in its ABC-TV Saturday night slot.

Other projects now going for Eells' Television Artists & Producers Corp. (no longer one-man) include a proposed network show out of a current feature picture, "The Littlest Hobo"; Renzo Cesana, "The Continental," as a half-hour daytime strip possibility for syndication; and a 50-50 contract with Hong Kong's Shaw Bros. for full color animation on a couple of series with an educational angle.

Eells, who is now in New York making the agency and network rounds on "Hobo," figures the lone producer has a singular advantage over the major studios on the cost line. One of the big reasons, he says, for the current high price of shows is the tremendous overhead of the major's facilities that have to wind up in production costs. Another advantage for the independent is the careful selection and launching that he can put into one package which enables higher quality at lower cost.

He points out that United Artists Associates spent several months and thousands and thousands of dollars underwriting the project

UA-UAA Anti-Trust Suit Dismissal Okayed

N.Y. Federal District Court Judge David N. Edelstein has signed an order granting the government's request to dismiss its anti-trust suit against United Artists and United Artists Associated.

Judge Edelstein signed the order in the wake of no opposition from UA and UAA. Justice Department sought the vacating order without prejudice. Justice said it withdrew its suit against UA and subsid UAA because conditions in the sale of pix to tv changed markedly since filing of the suit, namely the introduction of post-'48 pix.

In its original suit, government had contended UA's acquisition of UAA, with its large pix library, tended to stifle competition in the pix-to-tv field in violation of the anti-trust laws.

McLendon Stations' Red Propaganda, But He's Not Sure People Will Dig It

Washington, Jan. 30.

Gordon McLendon will substitute news by Radio Moscow for regular newscasts as an unprecedented stunt on his six AMs for one week beginning Feb. 1.

The Russian propaganda in the English language will run four minutes, every hour on the hour, without editorial comment.

At a Washington press conference with Sen. Clinton Anderson (D.—N. Mex.), McLendon seemed wary of potential pitfalls in his gimmick.

He said he would be disappointed if he didn't shock anyone and he wanted the broadcasts to "be misinterpreted by some for a moment."

But the stations in Dallas, Buffalo, San Francisco, Houston, Shreveport, and San Antonio are bracing their listeners. They will run 180 one minute announcements and 20 editorials explaining why they have subbed Radio Moscow for AP and UPI.

McLendon commented that one out of 1,000 Americans has heard the Red newscasts. "The American people really don't believe the lies, distoritions and omissions that Radio Moscow broadcasts in English to the English speaking people in the world," he added.

Ham operators will pick up shortwave broadcasts and transmit them to McLendon stations where they'll be put on the air. Stations will announce before and after that the news is from Radio Moscow.

The Dallas broadcaster said it is possible that the Russians may water down their newscasts, realizing that they will have a large American audience. His stations, he claimed, can reach 12 million.

He also said the listeners may be bored by Russian propaganda.

"I won't be surprised," McLendon added as an understatement, "if our stations are subject to criticism by people who don't understand the purpose of the newscasts."

The stations have offered sponsors the option of a hiatus over the eight-day period. McLendon said that his Dallas station has cancelled all news sponsorship, but there has been no comment from sponsors in other cities.

With reporters pointing out possible dangers, McLendon reflected that "the whole thing might be a bust."

The stations are KLIF in Dallas, WYSL in Buffalo, KABL in San Francisco, KILT in Houston, KEEL in Shreveport and KTSA in San Antonio.

KWKW $1,100,000 Sale

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Group headed by Howard Kalmenson bought the Pasadena-L.A. radio station KWKW for $1,100,000 from Les Malloy and Stanley Breyer, subject to FCC approval. New owners will continue the station's policy of all-Spanish programming targeted at the Mexican colony of 800,000.

Klamenson is the son of Ben Kalmenson is the son of Benveepee.

Fremantle Sees '62 Upswing In Foreign Market

If the month of January is a harbinger, the foreign market in '62 should outstrip anything earned in the past, according to Fremantle International prexy Paul Talbot.

During the month of January, usually a slow sales month, Fremantle concluded a total of 56 sales in 14 different countries for a gross of over $200,000.

Sales in Canada included the French-dubbed version of "Wonders of the Sea" to the CBC French network, plus three English language network sales. There were the American series "Funny World," the BBC produced "Bill and Ben the Flower Pot Men" and the Australian series "The Terrific Adventures of the Terrible Ten" which was renewed on the full English language net.

Another highlight of the month was the sale of nine series to NBN-3 Newcastle, one of Australia's new "country stations." Series purchased by Newcastle were "Yancy Derringer," hourlong "Hopalong Cassidy," "Playboy's Penthouse," "Greatest Headlines," "Foreign Intrigue," "Mr. Lucky," "My Little Margie," "42 on Film" and "Almanac." Newcastle station had previously bought "Peter Gunn" from Fremantle, giving it a total of 10 Fremantle shows when it goes on the air late in February.

Other countries in which sales were registered include Britain, Eire, Norway, Denmark, Germany, Yugoslavia, Egypt, Western Nigeria, Japan, Australia, Argentina, Peru and Guatemala. Britain became the 26th country to sign up for "Silents Please," with the series going on the air on Television Wales and The West.

Other series sold abroad during the month include "Greatest Headlines," "It's A Wonderful World," Encyclopedia Britannica series, "Royal Canadian Mounted Police," and the WPIX specials, "Secret Life of Adolph Hitler," and "The Cold War."

SG's 'Medicine Man' Is Put in Abeyance

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Screen Gems has postponed until next season a decision on whether or not it will reshoot its "The Medicine Man" pilot which starred Ernie Kovacs.

Studio coast chief Bill Dozier said SG has no one in mind at this time to replace Kovacs, who finished the half-hour comedy pilot the day before he was killed, on Jan. 13.

'Ripcord,' 'Keyhole' Sales

New sales on "Ripcord" and "Keyhole" were reported by Ziv-UA.

Stations signing up for "Keyhole" include WTVN, Columbus, WGR, Buffalo, WFMJ, Youngstown, and KGHL, Billings, Mont. "Ripcord" sales include Standard Oil of Indiana on WWTV, Cadillac, Mich., and R.I. Ziegler Meats, on WAPI-TV, Birmingham. New station deals on "Ripeord" are KTRK, Houston; KHVH, Honolulu; WRAL, Raleigh-Durham; KBMT, Beaumont, Tex.; and KTHV, Little Rock.

Foremost Dairies 11-Market Spread

CBS Films pulled a lush plum from the sparse regional tree by signing Foremost Dairies for 11-market sponsorship of "The Phil Silvers Show."

Deal is for full sponsorship of the show and covers third year episodes of Silvers in syndication. CBS Films, distributor, already has released the first and second year of the series, with the Foremost buy representing another year's cycle.

Contract calls for immediate starts on the following stations: WFIL, Philadelphia; KRON, San Francisco; WBTV, Charlotte, N.C.; KRBC, Abilene, Tex.; KCRA, Sacramento, Calif.; WCYB, Bristol, Va.; KSBW, Salinas Calif.; KING, Seattle, Wash.; KONO, San Antonio; KSLA, Shreveport, La.; and WFLA, Tampa, Fla.

Guild Bascom & Bonfigli is the agency for Foremost. Deal was concluded by CBS Films San Francisco office.

WSTV-TV'S BALLCASTS

Steubenville, Jan. 30.

For the fourth season, WSTV-TV, Steubenville-Wheeling, will carry a schedule of away Pittsburgh Pirate baseball games with two regular sponsors back on the dotted line, Iron City Beer and Atlantic Refining, along with a newcomer, the Mellon National Bank.

Schedule of 36 telecasts (including 18 night games) starts April 14

SYNDICATION'S GAUNT GHOST

Get on Vidpix & See the World

With the growth in the foreign market, p.a. tours of vidfilm stars are now global. CBS Films has set a tour of "Rawhide" stars Eric Fleming, Clint Eastwood and Paul Brinegar for Japan in mid-February.

"Rawhide" is one of the top shows on Japanese tv. As in the U.S., the stars will do the tv rounds and plan to participate in a parade for the Japanese sponsor, the Kotobukiya Co. The trio also will meet the Japanese actors who dub voices for them in the Japanese telecasts of the series.

Last summer, CBS Films sent Raymond Burr of "Perry Mason" on a tour that included stopovers in Australia, Italy, France, Germany, Sweden and England.

KCOP Boss to Tint Up Nightly In Anticipation of Color Spectrum

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

"It's inevitable that every tv station in town will have to go to color within the next two or three years so we'll be on the air with ours by April 1." Spoken not by an RCA man but by William Whitsett, prez and general manager of KCOP.

"To us it'll mean prestige for the station, better reception of our travel films (shot in color) and an extra two or three points in a show's rating, and that's a bundle in the local market. We look upon it as a capital investment that will pay big dividends." He is well aware that at the current volume of color sets the economic soundness of his color project can be questioned, but he has been assured by RCA that for every 49 black-and-white receivers sold the company sells 51 color sets. Since taking the station reins from Alvin Flanagan four months ago after being administrative veepee of all NAFI stations, Whitsett has had one overwhelming desire—to make KCOP a quality station. "By upgrading our programming and tinting up our nightly hour strip of travel shows as a starter we'll be well on our way, said Whitsett.

"Live programming in color will come later and the musical content of the schedule given greater emphasis. We'd like to do live musical shows but they can't be supported by advertisers at the going rate of the union [American Federation of Musicians] for its members. If we could get together with Local 47 on a payment basis that we could both live with, I would like to initiate it here and now. It would certainly give more work to musicians."

Whitsett scouts the rumors that KCOP will be tapped by FCC as an educational band. "Why us?" he poses. ["We've got a public service record second to none in L.A. I would think they'd pick a station that has lagged in its responsibility to the public. Maybe the present push for more UHF stations will be the solution without disturbing the status quo."

Le Vien's Dickers On Windsor Series

London, Jan. 30.

Jack Le Vien, here for the launching of "The Valiant Years" which he wrote in collaboration with John Lord, left London at the weekend for Paris, and within the next week or so will be meeting the Duke of Windsor to discuss his next vidpix project.

The original intention of making three one hour specials entitled "A King's Story" is being dropped at the suggestion of American networks, who favor a skein of 26 half-hours. The Duke has provisionally agreed to the project, and will be joint narrator with a yet to be named American.

The series will be of nostalgic pattern, in which the Duke will play the role of historian, covering the years between the two world wars, describing all the glamor and the gloom of the period.

Le Vien told VARIETY that he had discussed this feature with BBC-TV (who distributed "The Valiant Years" in Britain), but they have made no commitment so far. Nor had he to date made a deal with an American web.

'SILENTS PLEASE' GETS BRITISH RIDE

London, Jan. 30.

After three years of effort, Talbot Television (the British arm of Fremantle International) has finally found an outlet in the U.K. for "Silents Please," Welsh commercial tv contractor TWW has bought the 30-minute skein for its area alone.

Series has been slotted on Sundays at 5:30 p.m. and will oppose BBC-TV's click "Bronco," Talbot is hoping ratings for "Silents Please" will tip the scale in favor of projected deals with other regional stations which are currently fighting shy on account of the "untried" format of the show.

'Play of Week' To Educationals Via TV Guide's Grant

A series of 13 legit dramas from the vaults of National Telefilm Associates "Play of the Week" will be telecast on a dozen stations of the National Educational Television network through a grant from TV Guide mag.

The package of 13 televersions of Broadway and off-Broadway plays using top directorial and performing talents will begin on the educational outlets Feb. 18.

Selected for the NET-TV Guide series are "Medea," "Burning Bright," "Miss Julie," and "The Stronger" (in a two-in-one stanza), "A Month in the Country," "The World of Sholom Aleichem," "The Cherry Orchard," "Juno and the Paycock," "Tiger at the Gates," "Don Juan in Hell," "Valpone," "Mary Stuart," "The House of Bernarda Alba" and "Legend of Lovers."

Telecasting the series will be WQED, Pittsburgh; WUNC, Chapel Hill, N.C.; KETA, Oklahoma City; WKNO, Memphis; KVIE, Sacramento; KOED, Tulsa; WEDU, Tampa; KUON, Lincoln, Neb.; KNME, Albuquerque; WGTV, Athens, Ga.; WUFT, Gainesville, Fla.; and WENH, Durham, N.H.

Directors of the shows that will be seen include Jose Quintero, Curt Conway, Marc Daniels, Don Richardson, Daniel Petrie, Henry Kaplan and Harold Clurman. Thesps include Judith Anderson, Myron McCormick, Colleen Dewhurst, Uta Hagen, Luther Adler, Alexander Scourby, Gertrude Berg, Sam Levene, Nancy Walker, Zero Mostel, Helen Hayes and many others.

New 'Adventures'

Teledynamics has secured international sales rights to "True Adventure," a new color series by Bill Burrud Productions.

With 39 episodes in the can, Teledynamics reported that it's advancing $500,000 toward the production of 78 more episodes. Production on the new episodes will start in May, with filming slated in Thailand, Israel, Africa and other locales. Burrud himself is scheduled to appear in many of the episodes.

IN THE BALANCE: TV OPTION TIME

Lurking in the background of the current FCC hearings into network practices is the dilemma of the syndication biz.

In the preliminaries, the FCC heard some testimony about the depressed state of vidfilm syndication. The preliminaries, though, now are over, and the dramatic consequences for the syndicators revolve around what's going to happen to option time.

More than any one factor, syndicators blame the whittling away of option time by the networks as the cause of their troubles. The number of first-run vidfilm properties has dwindled from a healthy 30 of years ago to six or seven this current season and the outlook for '62-'63 is even dimmer.

Part of the preliminary testimony came from Ziv-UA which called the present state of affairs an emergency. Ziv-UA continues to release first-run properties at a fast pace, but many in the trade, looking at their own balance sheets, wonder how Ziv-UA will be able to keep it up.

From the syndicators' point of view one of the ironies is that the lengthening of network program service occurred at a time when the FCC whittled a half-an-hour from network option time in each broadcast segment of the day. The FCC ruling, which had no realistic effect, chopped network option time from three to two-and-a-half hours. The joker in the ruling, according to the bruised syndicators, was that there was nothing in the ruling which prohibited network programming service beyond two-and-a-half hours, or stopped the affils from taking what has proven out to be extended network programming feeds. All the ruling did was to set up a theoretical limitation, which had no practicality if the networks and affils agreed to go beyond two-and-a-half hours.

How much syndicators are hurting can be gleaned from the fate of some companies. National Telefilm Associates, which once accounted for a number of first-run entries yearly, has nothing going for it in the form of new entries other than new production on the "Third Man"; Filmaster, which tried to get into the syndie biz, had to bow out after a one-year try; the three network syndie subsids, to all intents and purposes, are now out of the first-run vidfilm race; Screen Gems at this point is playing the first-run market cool, with possible first-runners iffy.

Independent Television Corp., the company which bought out Television Programs of America, is having a tough time of it, as are most companies travelling the market-by-market route. ITC has turned red ink to black recently, but it's a daily fight to stay ahead of the game, despite a good overseas sales record.

What has dampened the ardor

Flock of 'Espionage' Coproduction Deals; ITC Moves Into Picture

Independent Television Corp., which had a network entry in "Danger Man," is participating in a coproduction deal on "Espionage." Other parties to deal are NBC International, Herb Brodkin's Plautus Productions and Associated Television, of England, ITC's parent company.

Production, which will begin approximately April 1, will be conducted in such a way as to be accepted 100% under British quota. Brodkin now is the exec producer of CBS-TV's "Defenders." "Espionage" pilot film will be directed by David Greene and scripted by Peter Stone. Both have many tv credits.

ITC's "Danger Man," now making the syndie rounds, had been aired by CBS-TV last season.

Foreign Vidpix Distribs Out Of 'Millionaire's Spectrum'; Com'l UK TV Pays $14 for Some Episodes

London, Jan. 30.

Advent of commercial television in Britain has resulted in a golden bonanza and led to the creation of the tv millionaire. But not everyone is permitted to share in the boom—least of all the foreign vidpic distributor who is taking quite a beating in this buyers' market. While an average price for a topline hour show sold to a commercial tv major is $7,000 a segment, there was a recent case of an American company accepting $14 per episode for a quarter-hour show from a regional station.

Situation is largely due to the Independent Television Authority's ruling that no region must receive more than 14% (or eight hours) overseas product per week. All distribs have to scramble for that restricted playing time.

Sale prices are worked out on a headcount basis. For example, a small regional station such as the recently-opened Border-TV which has a potential viewership in only 80,000 homes, would run to about $35 for a half-hour show. An area with three times that potential would offer just over $100 for a 30-minuter while one of the larger local outlets like Tyne-Tees Television, with nearly eight times the amount of homes currently seeing Border-TV, would do deals from $250 onwards.

Obviously, the best buyers and payers are the majors, whether commercial or BBC. Hour series like "Gunsmoke," "Rawhide," "Bonanza" and "Ben Casey" (bowing here on Thurs. 1) will fetch anything from $7,000 for the full U.K. rights. Sold to a major for showing in a single region, say London, an hour show would earn upwards of $2,350. (Price would slip to $70 on the headcount basis if sold to individual regions).

Deals with local stations are few and far between not only because of the low sale prices but because of the commercial tv "network pool." Latter is a selection of programs offered by the majors to regional outlets for a "network fee" (again set by a headcount) plus a flat, annual sum or a percentage of ad revenue. Arrangement allows local stations to take top programs from the "pool" for a low fee regardless of what they cost the majors. It is reported, for example, that Border-TV pays only $34 an hour for "pooled" product which includes clicks like "Sunday Night At The London Palladium," "Coronation Street," "Double Your Money" and so on.

Said "pool" is operated in two sections; one for weekdays and the other for weekends, and majors concerned split the proceeds on a percentage basis according to the numbers of hours made avail-

ATCHESON, TOPEKA IN N.Y. ROMANCE

What's the Atcheson, Topeka & the Santa Fe doing sponsoring local N.Y. tv stanzas? The railroad located out there in the great southwest, this week bought co-sponsorship of two WNBC-TV weekend newscasts, Gabe Pressman on Saturdays and Frank Blair on Sundays.

Reason was that AT&SF wants to induce New Yorker travelers to ride its line from Chicago westward. Pressman is seen Saturdays from 7 to 7:10 p.m. and Blair Sundays from 11 to 11:10 p.m. Other sponsor is Chesterfields, with AT&SF moving in March 31.

The New Image Behind Chi WGN '62 'Mike Award'

By LES BROWN

Chicago, Jan. 30.

Good radio—which is to say, radio which seeks to be better than the run-of-the-mine and is willing to invest in service and creativity—gets its just reward in due time. That's the thesis of WGN, and the Chicago Tribune AM-er offers its own recent history as sample proof.

About two years ago, the Michigan Ave. ad boys began speaking of WGN Radio as the most improved station in town, and even some of the local AM competition readily concurred. (The comparison implied in "improved" was with what the station had been throughout most of the 1950s.)

Coincident with its new reputation, WGN hit a high water mark for gross revenues in 1959 and topped it by 15% in 1960. Last year saw still another sales record—this time an increase of only less than 5%, but an increase nevertheless, and in a year when few stations in the country could make that boast.

To dramatize just how much acceptance WGN has won since it began a conceptual overhauling circa 1957, the gross revenues have gone up 97.65% since the year Ward L. Quaal asumed stewardship. It might also be added that in the Nielsen Coverage Survey No. 3, WGN leads the market in total circulation (being a 50,000 watter), or so its statisticians claim.

Charles Gates, who last July was upgraded from sales manager to station manger, attributes last year's increase, in a generally downbeat business year, very simply to the fact that (1) WGN felt no appreciable loss of business during the industry-wide recessive

'Young Tom Edison' As 1-Day Syndie Special

Thomas Alva Edison's birthday on Feb. 11 has become the occasion for an unusual picture deal by MGM-TV. The picture company agreed to sell a single pic, "Young Tom Edison," one of the 700 features in the pre-1948 library, to KQTV in Fort Dodge, Ia., as a special on the inventor's birthday.

Also novel was the station's sale of the pic to a single sponsor, the Corn Belt Power Cooperative.

"Young Tom Edison" is a Mickey Rooney starrer. MGM-TV also has "Edison The Man," with Spencer Tracy, both of which get big play on Feb. 11 by stations which have bought the MGM packages.

Smith & Cochran's 8-Part NET Series

Howard K. Smith and Ron Cochran handle commentary for a new eight-part series, produced for National Educational Television by Filmex, that covers global issues such as Berlin, Vietnam and Red China.

The series will start on the more than 50 NET stations Feb. 4 and in addition will be carried by 12 commercial stations around the country.

The kinescoped, half-hour shows have Smith, former CBS chief correspondent and general manager of the Washington Bureau (now on a sponsored ABC show), as opening and closing commentator, and Cochran, former New York newscaster and current "Armstrong Circle Theatre" host, on the narration. Series producer-director is Marshall Stone.

Minow & The Men For All TV Seasons

questioning, Stanton made plain his opposition to "suggestions" from officials for tv programming. Although he stressed he believed no one on the Commission was contemplating censorship in the legalistic sense of prior restraint, Stanton said he felt the approach of censorship "in the pit of my stomach" sometimes before he was aware of it cerebrally.

Stanton, asked by Commissioner Robert Bartley why he espoused the Doerfer plan (after the ex-Chairman John F. Doerfer) in 1960, said his network was already programming pubaffairs programs along the same lines.

Although philosophically opposed, Stanton explained he thought it would have been "ridiculous" for the network to pull back from its self-initiated pubaffairs campaign simply because Doerfer later came up with a similar one.

Stanton escaped challenge of this deft explanation. Bartley seemed to ask why Stanton took a hostile stance toward program-improvement suggestions from the present Commission while going along with the proposal by Doerfer (who, when he presented the scheme to the industry in the winter of 1960 was riding at the crest of his popularity with broadcasters and was at the zenith of his reputation as an industry apologist).

What Stanton's network was doing on its own in the pubaffairs field was only partly relevant to Bantley's question. The key element of the Doerfer plan, which proved abortive, was the rotating system among the networks.

Minow acknowledged that CBS-TV was doing a job in the pubaffairs field, although he mildly challenged precentage given by Salant on the amount of such programs as being inflated.

And he wanted to know of Stanton whether, under the present system of tight competition among the networks, CBS could do a better pubaffairs job without jeapordizing its competitive position. Stanton said he believed the networks should be given time to work out this problem under the present order of broadcasting.

For one thing, he stoutly opposed suggestions for easing the competitive burden by having all three webs program pubaffairs in the same slot. What kind of choice would this give the public at that particular hour, Stanton asked.

Minow asked about the broadcasters who fall down on the pubaffairs job, and the resultant disadvantage imposed on those who recognize their responsibility in the field. This was "tough," Stanton conceded. But it was far better for the industry to work it out than let the Government lend a hand.

Minow agreed, telling Stanton: "My point is that it would be much beter if it (a suggestion for more pubaffairs shows) were not coming from government, but from you."

But the Chairman questioned whether the industry could solve the problem on its own and asked whether Stanton believed FCC rules should be revised to impose an equal pubafairs burden across the board on licensees. Stanton said no.

A Kid With a Gripe

Minow read the CBS panel a letter relayed from President Kennedy from a nine-year-old who said tv shows were okay "when you watch them, but after, oh golly, I begin to get hallucinations." Children's programming being a pet project of the Chairman (he proposed a systematic scheme among the networks for presenting them during hours convenient for the small fry), the CBS hierarchy was well briefed on the subject.

Aubrey and others detailed CBS' efforts to shape satisfactory children's programming, but the big barrier, according to the execs, was the vast range in comprehension levels in children. A study under network auspices found that the only age span worth shaping informative programs for was from seven through nine. Ten-year-olds and up could appreciate adult informative fare, while current events programs didn't seem to reach toddlers of six and below. Salant, who has nine children, said the problem of devising a music appreciation program that would go over with the whole span of childhood was proving "insoluble" so far.

Asked about the scarcity of pubaffairs efforts in prime time, Stanton opined that it was often possible for such fare to achieve bigger audiences in off hours when the competition from entertainment programs on other webs wasn't so fierce.

To put a quality informative show on against top-rated entertainment "might kill it in its infancy," Stanton said. He also was against spotting pubaffairs productions at irregular intervals just to get them in the peak viewing hours. Although it was possible this technique would achieve a higher rating for the program, a regularly-scheduled program in non-prime time would build up a more appreciative and regular audience.

Minow wanted to know why the affiliates should not be required to disclose to FCC as a matter of public information the number of times—and the reasons why—they failed to clear network pubaffairs programs. Stanton said he went along with the idea that this should be a matter of public information, but added: "I get a little nervous to have it a matter of public information at FCC."

Stanton went on to say that disclosure should be voluntary at the affiliate level. He explained:

"I'd like to see the public start talking to us. That's the kind of public record I want to see . . . The people in Middletown wouldn't see the public record in Washington. I'd like to see it in Middletown."

Minow had this comment in the area of pubaffairs and programming in general: "In a free society there is no more precious gift than to have access to the eyes and ears of the country five or six hours a day. It is a staggering responsibility for the networks . . ."

Sponsor Control of Programming—This subject was exhumed and dissected at great length by Bryant. Upshot was expression of Stanton's view that the trend is away from advertiser-agency programs and toward network shows, whole or in part. In the pubaffairs and news field, of course, the CBS execs averred, a strict policy of chastity was maintained. In other fields of programming, the advertisers and their ad reps participated, particularly when the package was all theirs.

Stanton and his programming lieutenants told the Commission it'd be a shame to cut themselves off from the creative folk in the ad agencies, especially since talent is spread too thin as it is. As for the sometimes absurd and arbitrary taboos enforced by time buyers (Bryant made much of the P&G "25 precepts"), Aubrey and Stanton shrugged most of them off as of no consequence.

Programming v.p. Oscar Katz was asked about the instruction to avoid exhibition of filtertips when the sponsor's brand is of another variety.

"If that's all we had to worry about we'd be over the hump," Katz said.

Bryant bored in heavily on Aubrey with the example of the P&G program precepts, making such remarks as: "But I gather your programs are being guided by an editorial policy of which you don't know the content." Aubrey, rising a little ultimately objected, saying: "The implication to me (from Bryant's line of questioning) is that what Procter and Gamble is doing is detrimental. In my opinion, it is not."

Aubrey explained that except for the taboos against use of rival products, the P&G editorial guide was not unlike that of CBS. The standards, he insisted, are not designed to stifle creativity. Also, those precepts against offending minority groups were understandable from the sponsor's viewpoint.

Stanton cited the policy okayed by the CBS editorial board guiding serious dramatic programs. It pledges to refrain from clipping any controversial theme from a dramatic presentation just because it's controversial, as long as it's an essential ingredient to the plot, and, of course, tastefully done and unsensationalized.

Aubrey, pressed by Bryant about the "Defenders" segment dealing with abortion which the series' three sponsors are balking at, insisted that the film will be shown eventually. The web has no plan to bow to the sponsors' wishes in this case where the Stanton policy applies.

The most important thing, however, Stanton said, is the fact that CBS has the final word about what goes out over its facilities, no mater how little control it has exerted along the line of the production process. He said it would be next to impossible to look behind the finished product in all cases in order to see what influences and taboos were instrumental in shaping it. And he indicated he saw no need to do so as long as the program showed no signs of heavy-handed sponsor meddling.

Talent Gripes about Shackles on their Creativity—Bryant, citing the complaints lodged by some 25 from the creative side of tv in New York last summer, evoked strong retorts from Aubrey and Stanton.

Aubrey said: "My opinion is that these writers tend to forget the same conditions (sponsor taboos) applied when they got their start in tv . . . And these men somehow managed not only to establish themselves as names but to flourish . . . These conditions have not changed today . . . If these men had a burning desire to write for tv, they could get on with no difficulty . . .

"I think that it's not that the sources (for good scripts) on tv has dried up for them. But rather that they have been so successful on tv, they've gone on to greener pastures."

Stanton called on the talent in effect to wise up to reality, (and he pointed out they must be aware of reality to be gifted writers). "All creators," he contended, "have a bulit-in resistance to any kind of pressures. But they are aware that all kinds of pressure exist in our society." After all, Stanton opined, tv is "not divorced from the mainstream of American life" and its pulling and hauling forces.

Bryant and the CBS panel explored the peeves of David Susskind about an abortive repertory series he wanted CBS to air, and Garry Moore, who complained about alleged bullheadedness by web execs to cut back on the number of commercials (seven) for his hour night time show until it had rating success, giving him a better bargaining position.

Bryant was told that Susskind had promised to deliver some very large names, such as Sir Laurence Olivier, for the series which was to replace "GE Theatre" if it worked out. Idea was for a standard repertory group with a luminary taking star billing on a one-shot basis for every offering). Aubrey put it this way: "I'm afraid that he (Susskind) exaggerated the kind of talent he'd be able to get in his enthusiasm to sell the show." Since without top luminaries, the repertory series would vary little from the GE program, Aubrey said Susskind's idea was nixed.

As for Moore, Aubrey denied that the rating success was the chief reason for the network's relenting to his demand for fewer commercial interruptions. He said performers, particularly on live shows are constantly griping about commercials stepping on their lines. Programming Dept. v.p. Joseph Ream noted that since 1960, CBS has had a limit of five interruptions per hour, which is tougher than the NAB Code.

Control of Network Programming by Talent Agencies—Bryant, using testimony garnered during the Hollywood vidpix phase of the inquiry, questioned whether the networks were forced to take an unwanted package tied up by one of the big talent agencies in order to get a top star. Spencer Harrison v.p. and business manager for talent and contract properties, said the process is usually the reverse. Instead of the network going out to seek a star performer to fit a particular package of its own creation, MCA, GAC, William Morris or one of the other agencies comes to the network with the star and a package, all wrapped together. Bryant seemed to believe, however, that it only worked the way Harrison described, because the agencies would have it operate no other.

Control and Responsibility of Networks over Programming—Commissioner Ford voiced the view that the FCC's purpose in the inquiry was to see how the individual licensee could be held responsible for programming he receives from the webs. But he found this difficult to achieve when so much of the testimony pointed to the affiliates delegating responsibility to the networks, and the networks delegating to others.

In particular reference to the Hollywood vidpixers, Ford wanted to know how program makers for the networks could operate "without a Hayes Office."

Stanton said the network's own creative staffers "are involved in all stages of a web production or co-production." Guy della Cioppa, v.p. for programs in Hollywood, went further to say there is close cooperation with creators of programs bankrolled entirely by sponsors. He averred that the CBS-TV program department members are close to the outside creators "emotionally and socially" and have the "utmost control" over how the program is being shaped.

Ream elaborated on this line by telling Ford that his Program Practices Dept. is actually "more than the Hayes Office." He said: "We make no distinction whether the program is ours or completely outside. We have access to studio lots. There is no question about our ability, and our right to get into a production at any stage."

Ford, however, remained skeptical. He said it seemed to him line of programming responsibility had too many thin sections where a break could occur.

Role of Affiliate

Role of the Affiliate and the Question of Centralized vs. Dispersed Control of Programming—This testimony featured pledges by Stanton to strive harder to "go further down the road" in keeping the affiliates informed about what's being shaped for networking. He said he didn't think it was feasible to screen via closed circuit all programs, but "it could be done in certain categories."

Stanton objected to any regulatory move which would centralize legal responsibility for programming in the networks. He said he infinitely preferred to go overboard in the direction of filling in the affiliates on programming, and pointed to the work CBS had already done in this field. The CBS prexy said he balked at the idea of taking responsibility for the programs of some 200 tv outlets linked to his network. The concept of centralization, such as ventured by Washington attorney W. Theodore Pierson two years ago, repelled him. He said he's always been more happy with the "dispersion" principle.

For one thing, Stanton told the Commission, he would probably feel obliged to produce the programming going out over the network. This would be the only way he could be sure that no sponsor taboos were sneaking in the backdoor, he said.

And he told Minow that should all programming power be concentrated in the hands of the networks, "it would be very easy for a person in your position to pick up the phone and say, 'why didn't you have that program last night'?" Stanton hastened to add that he didn't think Minow would ever do a thing like that.

Ratings—Minow and Bryant tossed questions which reflected skepticism about the efficacy of ratings and whether they were abused.

The CBS answer amounted to a contention that ratings were only one of many considerations in the program selection process, but were useful when one wanted to count noses and see how a program stacked up thusly.

Action-Adventure and Crime-Violence—In answer to queries about the fadeout of serious dramatic fare of the "Playhouse 90" and "Studio One" ilk, Stanton theorized that tv forms have their cycles. But he hopefully ventured that serious drama was on its way back in and action-adventure-westerns were "phasing out."

The CBS execs cited the Westinghouse specials this year, and made a big fuss about "The Defenders," described as something unique in combining the art of a dramatic anthology with the appeal of character build-up inherent in a series.

Anyway, Stanton said, the "good old days" or so-called "Golden era" of tv when "Playhouse 90" and like shows were in their glory are a little overrated. One would be appalled, he said, to see what made up the web schedule 10 years ago.

CBS assured the Commission that the charges recently hurled by Chairman Thomas Dodd (D-Conn.) of the Juvenile Delinquency Subcommittee did not apply to it.

CBS would be willing to swear that no instructions were given to soup up programs with sex and violence by any CBS exec, as alleged by Dodd.

In terms of number of "combat scenes," the network schedule experienced a 51% reduction from 1959-60 to 1960-61, and an 8% falloff from last season to this.

Speaking of the so-called "Three M's (murder, mediocrity mayhem), Stanton said mediocrity was a sticky word because "one man's mediocrity might be another's good program."

Stanton's Forecasts and Resolutions—In summation, Stanton said he believed the recent Colgate-Palmolive decision by Federal Trade Commission, banning camera and other trickery on tv blurbs, will improve the complexion of commercials generally.

"On the entertainment side," he added, "I think we'll have to turn to the public more and more to find out the kind of things the public wants and needs and at the same time experiment with new forms to provide a choice."

Stanton's Credo

Washington, Jan. 30.

Asked to give his views on what a network is supposed to do, CBS prexy Frank Stanton gave this off-the-cuff statement of principle:

"I believe our basic responsibility is to provide a balanced national program schedule in which we furnish a mixture of entertainment and informative fare. In the information area, I believe we have a responsibility to impart what's going on in the world . . . to probe in depth . . . experiment in new art forms of programming. As for entertainment, I believe we ought to have a diversity of entertainment programs. I believe we have an obligation to come up with many new ideas.

"Overriding everything is the quality of our programs . . . We have the responsibility to maintain an economic base on which to operate because without having the oil for the lamps, we can't light the way. We have to keep in mind what we are—an advertiser-supported medium. And this is the best way."

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular markets. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U S

(*) ARB's Oct.-Nov. 1961 survey covered a multi-week period Syndicated shows sharing one of the weeks with an alternating or special program are listed, with the multi-week rating of all programs in the time period given.

In a Manner of Speaking

As far as we know, no member of any college debating team has ever been laid low by a flying rebuttal (although many a match has hinged on a knack for making the extra point).

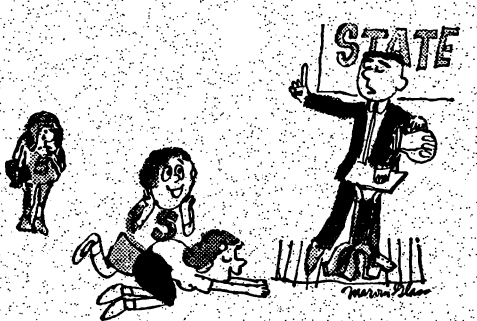
But the absence of physical peril in debating—most water-pitchers are simply too heavy for accurate throwing—has never reduced the excitement of this time-honored platform sport.

The proof? Today—approximately 71 years after the very first intercollegiate debate in America (between Yale and Harvard, of course)—varsity debating ranks as the leading form of non-athletic competition among our colleges and universities.

And, starting this Saturday (12:30 to 1 p.m., NYT), NBC viewers will be discovering for themselves just how fascinating a spectator attraction this sort of college competition can be.

"Championship Debate" is a brand-new concept in network programming. Over the next few months, 16 of the nation's top debating teams will be seen and heard—live—from our New York studios. The eventual winner of this elimination tourney will then be matched against an as-yet unselected team from overseas. That engagement, too, will be televised live from New York.

Each of the contests will be judged by a panel of three college debating coaches. Serving as moderator is Dr. James H. McBath, associate professor of speech at the University of Southern California and chairman of the National Debate Board of the American Forensic Association.



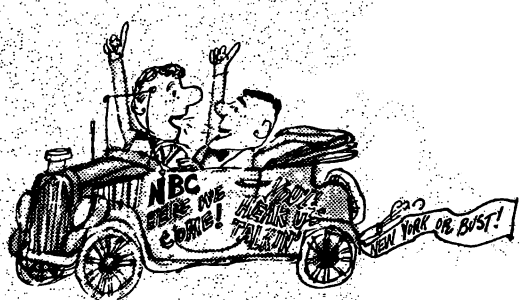
When you get right down to it, there's no good reason why the best of our young debaters across the land shouldn't be getting the same sort of adulation regularly accorded our college football heroes (a few of whom couldn't argue their way out of a huddle).

By bringing these largely unsung youngsters before network audiences, NBC (in association with the American Forensic Association and the American Student Foundation) hopes to narrow that adulation gap.

It's our feeling that viewers will be tremendously impressed by the intelligence, poise and debating skills of these collegians who, over the course of the TV tournament, will be arguing everything from the solution of the Berlin crisis to the wisdom of punishing parents by law for the misdeeds of delinquent children.

Executive producer of "Championship Debate" is NBC's George Heinemann, an essentially easy-going chap who claims he's never won an argument from anyone in his life, but whose reputation for turning out fine TV shows—including this season's splendid "Update" series—has never required any loud defending.

We think he has another winner here. Up to now, of course, the TV adversaries attracting the most attention in a debate series were a couple of former collegians named Kennedy and Nixon. The undergraduates on "Championship Debate" will not be playing for stakes quite that high—although each week's winning and losing college will get suitable cash awards—but the atmosphere will be "do-or-die," nevertheless.



Aside from its merit as entertainment, the series cannot help but impress young viewers with the plus-values of well-researched arguments, properly organized materials and the ability to think on one's feet.

As for the adults in the TV audience (many of whom never even suspected the importance of debating skill until they were married), they, too, may learn a few helpful lessons from the new series.

Above all, we think, they'll be reminded that our campuses from coast-to-coast are chock-full of bright, serious-minded, well-informed youngsters. For the plain and reassuring truth is that intercollegiate debating, which was going on long before the first freshman swallowed a live goldfish, will go out of fashion just about the time the first goldfish swallows a live freshman.

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

(*) ARB's Oct.-Nov. 1961 survey covered a multi-week period Syndicated shows sharing one of the weeks with an alternating or special program are listed, with the multi-week rating of all programs in the time period given.

BOB HOPE CHRISTMAS SHOW
With Bob Hope, Dorothy Provine, Jayne Mansfield, Anita Bryant, Jerry Colonna, Rosemarie Frankland, Peter Leeds, Sgt. George Dewey, Les Brown Orch
Producer: Jack Hope
Director: Jack Shea
Writers: Mort Lachman, others
60 Mins., Wed., 9 p.m.
NBC-TV (film)

(Leo Burnett)

It may have been a little late in the season, but "The Bob Hope Christmas Show" on NBC-TV Wednesday night (24), was well worth waiting for. Filmed at U.S. Air Force bases in the Arctic during Hope's 12th annual overseas Yule tour, the program not only had brisk entertainment values but also reminded the American public of the thousands of GIs who have the lonely task of maintaining the DEW line.

Hope's unit appeared before 12 audiences while visiting such bases as Argentia, Nfld.; Goose Bay, Labrador; Frobisher Bay, Baffin Island, and Sondrestrom Fjord, Greenland. Portions of six of the performances formed the basis of the tv airer.

Hope has the formula down pat for the GI auditors—sexy femmes in his troupe along with topical gags in the service idiom. Jayne Mansfield displayed a good slice of what the boys wanted to see while Dorothy Provine, "Miss World" (Rosemarie Frankland) and Anita Bryant also dished out some copious curves.

For the comedy aspects Hope came up with such quips as "up here Playboy magazine is required reading . . . They don't want you to forget what you can't have here." Still another, "A guy froze to death doing The Twist; they couldn't bury him, they had to screw him into the ground."

Miss Provine contributed some of her familiar routines, Miss Mansfield was a hilarious Juliet in a Shakespeare skit while Miss Bryant warbled a perky "Step by Step." "Miss World" scored more with her figure than her voice in a duet with Hope. Jerry Colonna clicked in a variety of comic roles while Les Brown's band provided strong backing.

Sgt. George Dewey and Peter Leeds rounded out the support for the troupe. Withal, "Hope's Christmas Show" was a lively 60 minutes. Program, incidentally, pre-empted the "Perry Como Show" and Chrysler Corp. picked up the tab. Gilb.

PETE WILLIAMS SHOW
With Pete Williams, Cousin Janet, others
Producer: Williams
Director: Len Sarnacki
30 Mins.; Sat., 7 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WRGB-TV, Schenectady

New show, in which Pete Williams quadruples as producer, emcee-guitarist, vocalist, and leader of a western-hill billy type musical unit, and in which Cousin Janet draws feature billing, along with visiting folk dancing groups, is presented live before a sizable studio audience in a barnlike setting. It can be tightened and smoothed out and will be more solid when Williams grows more familiar with the visual medium.

Three musicians—a fiddler, a bass and a piano accordionist, furnish the instrumental support. They might be personalized, however, and could use more facial projection. Cousin Janet, called from her seat at a table near the foursome, is a contralto who soloed one number with the somewhat flat western style, then she dueted, for the hymn, "The Old Rugged Cross," with Williams.

A cute touch was a child of four or five who came from the audience "to repeat," via Williams' chest mike, a talking song.

In most of the folk-dancing sequences, five couples (appropriately attired) took part. The calling was just fair. Studioites also dressed the part.

Show is well spotted—after Sander Vanocur's news commentary via NBC (weeknights it's the Huntley-Brinkley Report) and another web program, "The Guardhouse."

This is a reasonably ambitious local program. Jaco.

PROFESSIONAL BOWLERS TOUR
With Chris Schenkel, Jack Buck
Producer: Jim Colligan
Director: Jack Lubell
90 Mins., Sat., 4:30 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
ABC-TV

Sportscaster Chris Schenkel kept telling viewers that bowling is "America's favorite family sport." But then his sidekick Jack Buck opined at one point, "bowlers are a particular breed."

Otherwise, the team works in expert unison in this hour and a half ABC-TV coverage of touring pro bowlers. Same time, whether for particular breed or the whole family, bowling has cultivated a jargon of its own. From Schenkel-Buck: "Stroke a full roller;" "Left a six-ten, chopped the six off the ten;" "Thin hit, but a good working ball;" "has that ball in an exact arch;" "Lanes here have been mighty stiff;" "Carry one for the turkey."

For all the inside sound, the show still had a competitive excitement for nonfans as well as buffs. Saturday (27) outing live from Albany, N.Y., covered the state's semifinals and finals featuring four bowlers out of 192 entrants in single-game competition. With $5,000 as top prize money and the one-game do-or-die setup, the tension built. There also was the continuity of the same topnotch bowlers in the lead around the circuit, and the fascination of the prize money mounting weekly among the leaders with the totals displayed and interpreted by Schenkel and Buck. For the record, Fred Lening was the winner Saturday in a final match that almost saw J. Wilbur Sims emerge in a final burst. Score was 254 to 243, and, they say, that's pretty good bowling.

Jack Lubell's direction was hip to the action with dramatic zooms and behind-the-pins lensing of tough shots.

This was the third show in the series and the first live. First two were on tape while the remaining 13 will be live.

It may be a family game, after all. One of the many sponsors, Brunswick, was pitching Capizio bowling shoes and bowling balls of "explosive pink" to guess what segment of the audience. Bill.

SOUPY SALES SHOW
With Clyde Adler
Producer: Allan Bregman
Director: Steve Binder
30 Mins.; Fri., 7:30 p.m.
ABC-TV, from H'wood

Returning to the network in the spot vacated by "Straightaway," this is a moppet-slanted show with a surrealist overlay. As Soupy Sales, Clyde Adler has a way-out comedy attack whose point is likely beyond the ken of the youngsters although they'll no doubt appreciate the action and noise.

For adults, Adler not only makes his points, he overmakes them. On the preem, he came up with a promising pie-in-the-face routine involving an old lady and her chauffeur, but it stayed around too long. It became repetitious, but it was marrked by one memorable touch: a custard pie in the old lady's armpit. Similarly, a fairy tale told by one of Adler's puppet characters had some moments of charm, but the spoonerism gimmick was not only an old chestnut but it was done to a cinder. A guest slot by Frank Sinatra, as a favor for one of his buddies, was a surprise but did not affect the show's general character.

Adler's puppets and his use of assorted human characters, only showing their arms, are a positive potential if he learns how to quit when he's ahead. Herm.

Writer: Mary Dornheim
30 Mins., Tues., 10:30 p.m.
PARTICIPATING
WABC-TV, N. Y. (live & tape)

WABC-TV did an interesting show last week, built about tapes of foreign tv performances, and the half-hour indirectly raised some important questions about just what Americans will be seeing five years hence "once international television becomes a reality." Will entertainment from abroad be live, will it be taped and if it is going to be taped, why can't we have more of it now?

Very simple in design, "Show World" gave a hint of how enjoyable a peek at foreign tv can be. There were six tapes, one of a Japanese dance troupe, two of Italo acts, two of Russian performances and a dubbed Spanish tape of "Mike Hammer," made here in America. Latter was a gimmick bit, seen before in trade circles, and put in mainly, because "Hammer" was played by Darren McGavin, who hosted this local special.

The Italo acts were the bill's weakest. Show opened with the Quartette Cetra, a singing troupe that did an uninspired vocal staging that occasionally emitted the words "Lambeth Walk." A thrush named Mondaini, billed by WABC as the Italian Dinah Shore, sang nicely but her support was a cliche-ridden piece of group terpsichore that was as bad as some of the poor choreography seen here. But at least a viewer could see what Italian tv was like, including its faults.

The Russian bits were exciting. One was of puppets manipulated by Mai & Divov and the camera-work was excellent, making the two puppets seem multi-dimensional. Funny, the camerawork for the brilliant dancing of a Georgian Dance group was bad, proving perhaps that even the Russians are subject to technical failure.

The WABC-TV technical contributions, were not good. Station production team managed to abort some of the taped pieces at just the climactic moment. For instance, the puppets were great and it would have been interesting to see the puppeteers, but just as the puppeteers started coming into view, the tape was cut off with a kind of confused apology voiced for the station by host McGavin. McGavin, is a charming man and a very competent actor, but too much the actor, it would seem, to have been the perfect host-narrator; he exercised no tonal understatement whatsoever.

WABC-TV suggested that such acts as the ones shown would be carried live in five years. But there are reports that carrying everything live would be an economic burden and that live transmissions would probably be limited to news. Still and all, one can't blame WABC-TV for expecting the best and, by the same token, one can only compliment WABC-TV for doing this little international tv stint. Art.

HOME AGAIN
With Steve Allen, others
Producer: Dan Schuffman
Director-Writer: Schuffman
60 Mins., Tues., 9:30 p.m.
BUDWEISER
WBKB, Chicago (film)

(D'Arcy)

Inspired by the Thomas Wolfe-coined truism, "You Can't Go Home Again," WBKB has embarked on a new series of specials that examine the emotional and intellectual reactions of prominent ex-Chicagoans to the revisited environs of their youth. It is a fresh idea for television, and a laudable project on that score alone, but the premiere installment—with Steve Allen as the subject—had a certain literary profundity, and other artistic qualities besides, that made it one of the outstanding video contributions by a local station this season.

The choice of Allen to initiate the portfolio was a fortunate one, he being articulate, perceptive of what the series is trying to achieve, and enough of an actor to communicate his emotional responses without belaboring them. The film was shot when the actor-comedian-writer was in Chi. last summer starring in a stock play at the Edgewater Beach Playhouse.

Nature created the right mood for reminiscing in the opening segment. It was raining, and Allen sat in the empty theatre recounting his boyhood and teenage days in Chicago.

From there the film shifted to his old neighborhood, the Hyde Park-Woodlawn district on the southside, showing Allen ambling on the sidewalks on a sunlit day, stopping at the apartment houses he used to live in, at the schools he attended, at the homes of yesteryear's friends, and at the places where he had played. All of it had changed considerably in 20 years. Allen had an anecdote or a pointed remembrance for such things as the passageways he used to hide in, the alleys that were the shortcuts, and the fences he and his boy chums used to sit on. He even found the old piano he used to practice on.

For all the philosophizing over whether or not one can go home again, the outing really amounted to a video self-portrait of Allen—not a vain one, but an honest, self-analytical piecing together of how the boyhood years influenced the mature man. That the scenes were Chicago scenes was really only incidental to the content of the program.

One of its chief virtues was that it prompted a certain audience participation, a kind of "Reminisce Along With Steve," for it was impossible not to feel the similarities in one's own childhood, no matter where raised, or when. Allen was a superb narrator of Dan Schuffman's skillful script.

The cinematographic team of Sam Ventura and Ronnie Born managed to catch the dramatic essences of the otherwise commonplace and monotonous streets, but the costar of the show was pianist Marty Rubenstein, who fashioned the perfect jazz score and performed it with a small unit. His music remarkably conveyed the quick-step of the present against a sense of longing for the past. Les.

OUR MAN IN VIENNA
With David Brinkley, others
Producer: Reuven Frank
Director: James Kitchell
60 Mins.; Wed., 10 p.m.
WESTINGHOUSE
NBC-TV (film)

(McCann-Erickson)

A wry David Brinkley turned his crackling tongue on Vienna and, in an odd sort of way, he made the old city and its people attractive.

What's wrong in just enjoying life? Brinkley said the Viennese are overfed and underworked. Cameras showed construction men lazying in the sun, storekeepers shuttering for a two-hour afternoon siesta, and people hiking, gossipping and eating, eating, eating. Brinkley, in describing all this, had a sting in his tongue, not anything of an acid quality, but of a "look at them compared to us" quality.

The faces of the Viennese, though, belied all the commentary. They were happy faces, comfortable, unharried, untroubled. George Bernard Shaw felt that living just for enjoyment was the worst hell conceived for man. The Viennese, as depicted on this show, proved G.B.S. and Brinkley wrong.

Perhaps if Brinkley dug deeper he might have found the happy faces were mere masks, for the current and past history of Austria and Vienna has more than its share of the world's tragedy. That he didn't may be a blessing. It's good to know that in one corner of the globe people are fairly prosperous, without working themselves to death, without being driven by greed and envy, even if that knowledge may be based on some malarky.

Some of Austria's past was interwoven in this highly personal tour. There was that ugly Hitler interlude; there was the comic opera motif of the reign of the Hapsburg family; there were the houses of Beethoven and the other greats of the musical world; the baroque old world and the comfortable Vienna of today. There was a feature highlight concerning a legal battle over who has the rights to bake a certain pastry that could make a fine film in the tradition of some of the English comedies.

It was an hour tour worth taking on television—even if Brinkley kidded some U.S. attitudes. Horo.

Out of the Warner Bros. studios, "Room For One More" is a slick filmed series blending comedy and pathos in an appealing story line. It's based on the Anna Perrot Rose novel of the same name which was also converted into a theatrical feature some years ago. It moved into the ABC-TV schedule last Saturday night (27) as one of the half-hours filling in for the departing "Roaring '20s".

The kickoff was a well-paced, amusing stanza introducing the main characters and central theme of the series. As the leads, Andrew Duggan and Peggy McKay play a suburban couple with two of their own children and several foster children crowding the household. It's an idea of great potential sentimentality, but on the opener at least the schmaltz was kept firmly in check by a sharp script that accented the laughs.

It was a wholly optimistic yarn involving a juvenile delinquent who was regenerated by the love of his foster parents. The gag situation was based on making a welfare investigator believe the house contained more bedrooms than there actually were. It was a somewhat thin idea but it was carried off with a warmth and good nature that may prove to be very infectious if it can be maintained.

Duggan and Miss McKay handled the key adult roles neatly, while the flock of youngsters were guided with a firm hand along a thesping pattern that avoided overcuteness. Herm.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

CBS Reports

Television, which so often glamorizes the newspaper profession in fiction, took a realistic look at the press in last Thursday's "CBS Reports" and came off with a good show.

Titled "Death in the City Room," the hour dealt with the recent demise of two Los Angeles dailies. Story, though, was larger than the el foldo of Hearst's Los Angeles Examiner and Chandler's Los Angeles Mirror. It recapped the decrease in the number of daily newspapers in the U.S., the growth of monopoly newspaper situations in major cities, and the general loss of vitality of many newspapers.

It wasn't a one-sided story, nor could it be called an attack. It was an appraisal which contained the good aspects of the newspaper profession as well as the bad. To its credit, too, the appraisal was furnished by newspapermen, themselves, publishers, editors, reporters and an advertising manager.

In the hour, there was the drama of a dream gone askew, the tragedy of a "brass check," and the bewilderment of a newspaper staff finding themselves stranded. The hour also helped to take the public behind the front page—this was its major contribution—and shed light on such problems as publishers' bias, editorial weakness, big-money newspaper needs, and the divorcement of some newspapers from the political bend of its readers.

Charles Collingwood, who does the local N.Y. "WCBS-TV Views the Press," acted as one of the show's reporters. The other was Jack Beck, CBS' Coast correspondent, who also produced the program. Together, they explored the question of the Los Angeles situation and the status of newspapers throughout the country with many men. The roster included James Richardson, former city editor of Nearly eight million adult Americans bear the burden of illiteracy. This is a national problem so staggering that President Kennedy is asking the Congress for fifty million dollars to drive it from our land. WFIL-TV has proved that television can answer this pressing national need.

"Operation Alphabet" is an early morning half hour television program produced by WFIL-TV in cooperation with the Adult Extension Division of the Philadelphia Board of Education. This highly successful twenty-week series presented on WFIL-TV aided more than fifty thousand adult illiterates to read and write to the fourth grade level. Opening new worlds of human communications and adding real meaning to democracy.

Colgate's Sweeping Policy Change For Fast and Efficient TV Buys —On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By BILL GREELEY

Colgate, one of tv's big four with network billings estimated at between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000, is making a sweeping change in its tv operations.

For the giant soapery it means has vested program administration with the various brand groups. From now on, the authority will be under corporate.

For the giant soapery it meeans a return to the centralization that was in effect before Stuart Sherman retired as broadcast director three years ago (George Laboda is current chief).

It's believed the move will allow the company to move more quickly and efficiently in its television buys. Colgate's prime agency, Ted Bates, has worked up a detailed plan for buying under the new system. The report is strictly confidential, but it's been learned that it broadly deals with the following: Whether or not Colgate should own and control its shows; the value of maximum discounts on all three networks; relative merits of the half-hour vs. the hour show; which shows should be cancelled and which renewed; and what the '62-'63 schedule should be.

The move to centralization of the media function is another step in the reorganization of Colgate that has been under way since prexy George Lesch took over as chief executive officer with board chairman E. H. Little stepping out. While the outlook has been improved (Colgate stock is up substantially), it's no secret that there is disatisfaction with the company's competitive position. In the battle of the big three—Colgate, Procter & Gamble and Lever Bros. —the Colgate brands have not taken command (there are some 50').

The weak brand position has been hard to figure in the light of the company's primetime network outlay. This season's lineup appears strong with participations in shows on NBC and CBS including "Thriller," "Dr. Kildare," "Robert Taylor's Detectives," "Dobie Gillis," "Checkmate," "Rawhide," "Perry Mason," and Ed Sullivan. (The outline of the new buying plan would indicate that the coming season will see Colgate spread to all three networks.)

Prexy Lesch also has made rather sweeping changes in Colgate's executive personnel in all areas. Predictions are there will be more to come.

Back In the Act

Roger Pryor, former bandleader and film actor who retired from show biz in 1950 to become a Foote, Cone & Belding veepee, will return to the scene.

Pryor, who voiced the radio "U. S. Steel Hour Theatre Guild" and the Percy Faith band show, will handle voice-over on the Clairol commercials slated for the NBC-TV special, "Debutante '62," Feb. 9. The four blurbs will tell a continuing story.

Clairol, a FC&B client, auditioned 20 announcers in Hollywood for the commercial voice. Then Clairol prexy Richard L. Gelb recalled hearing Pryor's dulcet tones in a client-agency session and named the exec for the job.

Advance: Deadline for entries in the 1962 American TV Commercials Festival & Forum, to be staged May 4, is Feb. 15 . . . Ted Bates copy writer Phil Newill is co-author with Alaskan Grant Pearson of a book about life on the last frontier, "My Life of High Adventure" . . . Robert Bartlett Jr. has been promoted to account director at North agency, Chicago . . . New Biz: Shulton to Papert, Koenig, Lois for a product assignment . . . Veepee stripes for Beverly Smith and Harry Thompson at McCann-Marschalk. Smith is director of tv-radio services. Thompson is an account exec.

Kelvin Keech Hangs Up Pear-Shaped Tone After 33-Year Career In Radio

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Kelvin Keech, a voice out of the golden era of radio when announcers had show biz status and salaries to prove it, finally hung up his pear-shaped tones last week, retiring from the business after a 33-year tenure before the microphones. For the past 10 years, Keech had been with the ABC Radio, joining the network after an NBC career which began in 1929.

With some incidental exceptions, Keech's career was wholly with the sightless kilocycles. He did handle a tv asignsment as an announcer for a Kaiser-Frazer show several years ago and sees no connection between that fact and the eventual demise of that automobile.

For Keech, the key element in the superiority of the announcer's role on radio, as against tv, was that of intimacy. According to this theory, listeners were readier to take a disembodied voice into their homes as part of the family than they are the full and living portraits of the performers as they are shown on television. "I'm only five foot six," Keech said, "but my radio listeners always pictured me as a tall thin fashion plate and that exercise of their imagination was beneficial to us mortals."

Born in Hawaii and expert on the ukelele, Keech was an old vaudevillian, working in a musical act with Ord Hamilton during the early 1920s in England. Back in the U. S., he broke into an announcing career under the sponsorship of the late Peter DeRose and May Singhi Breen and became emcee for NBC's "Dance Band" series in 1929, three years after the web began operation as the first radio network. He also served as the voice for such shows as "Billy and Betty," "Warden Lawes," "Popeye," "Eveready Hour," "Stella Dallas, Back Stage Wife," Joan Davis and Irene Rich, among others.

Last Wednesday (24), a group of radio oldtimers turned out at Tavern-On-The-Green in Central Park, N. Y., to give Keech a sendoff. Among those present were Milton Cross, who hosted the banquet, Rudy Vallee, Ben Grauer, Lyle Van, Frank Gallop, Nelson Case, Andre Baruch, Ed Herlihy, Charles F. McCarthy, James Wallington, Howard Claney, Hugh James, David Ross, Gene Hamilton, Glenn Riggs, Howard Petrie, Rosa Rio, May Singhi Breen, Harry Reser and Jeff Sparks.

'Operation Alphabet' Back on WFIL-TV Sked

Philadelphia, Jan. 30.

"Operation Alphabet," an attack on illiteracy in this area through television, was resumed this week for five mornings a week over a 20-week air semester on WFIL-TV.

Dr. Alexander Shevlin, member of the radio-tv staff of the Philadelphia board of education, will teach an estimated 40,000 people how to read and write. Program is televised Monday through Friday from 6:30 to 7 a.m., and is backed by the Chamber of Commerce, the Council of Churches and other civic agencies.

Estimated audience is based on U.S. census figures that 2.7 persons are illiterate out of every 1,000, which gives the Philadelphia area a total of 190,000 illiterates.

Don McNeill on 'Flair'

Don McNeill, veteran host of ABC Radio's "Breakfast Club," is taking on another network radio chore starting in February.

He's joining the talent roster on "Flair" for human interest commentaries.

London Agencies

London, Jan. 30.

The Garland-Compton agency is about to form companies in five countries—France, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland and West Germany—so as to be in a position to offer U. S. and British advertisers full service in key continental marketing areas . . . Peter Marsh has been appointed tv director in charge of Osborne-Peacock's production services . . . Extensive advertising of five major confectionery lines concentrating largely on commercial tv exposure is due from John Mackintosh and Sons via agents Osborne-Peacock . . . A $400,000 campaign split into 10 separate sections is being planned for Corsets Silhoutte Ltd. by R. S. Caplin Ltd. featuring the client's entire range of products. Each section will warrant 30-second spots on all stations . . . National Milk publicity Council, one of Britain's biggest advertisers, plans to spend more than $5,500,000 advertising dairy products this year. Agents: Mather & Crowther.

Hearings Crimp Sales Activity

The hottest medium on Madison Ave. now is radio, but, unfortunately for trade advertisers, this particular brand of audio is not for sale.

Up and down the street in the tv exec suites they've dusted off the old AM receivers to tune in the daily live broadcasts of FCC's Washington hearings on tv programming featuring web wigs and carried live by New York City's WNYC. Naturally, the noncommercial station's remotes are being monitored throughout the network offices by execs who aren't on the scene.

Agency execs say the three-week hearings have virtually brought to a standstill the hoped-for early buying season. Negotiating with the networks is just about impossible, they say, because if the network execs aren't in the capital, they are "huddling" to dope testimony.

CBS, NBC's 500G For For Educational TV If ABC Forks Over 250G

There's another $500,000 earmarked for the N.Y. educational tv station from CBS and NBC, if ABC would grant another $250,000, according to Dr. Samuel B. Gould, prexy of Educational Television for the Metropolitan Area (ETMA).

Dr. Gould, in response to a series of questions regarding financing of the projected etv outlet, explored the contributions of the networks to date. Financial aspects of the projected N.Y. etv operation came up after Dr. Gould stated that ETMA will ask for a postponement from March to sometime in September for the start of etv broadcasting. He said the postpostponement bid will be made to the Federal Communications Commission. He said the delay is being sought to give ETMA more time to fashion programming of caliber.

Dr. Gould, winding up his affairs as chancellor of the U. of California, in Santa Barbara, welcomed the contributions from the commercial telecasters in N.Y. as "wonderful." The three webs had each contributed $250,000 apiece toward the purchase price of the stations. There had been talk prior to the closing date of the purchase that each of the webs would contribute $500,000. It was after the board of directors of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres decided on a contribution of $250,000 that CBS and NBC lowered its reported contribution to match that of ABPT's parent company of ABC. In response to a direct question, Dr. Gould said that CBS and NBC would contribute another $250,000 apiece if ABC did so.

He said the first year's budget of the etv station would be about $2,000,000. Dr. Gould, who assumes his post as prexy of ETMA as of July 1, said that he will be in ETMA's New York office once a month until his permanent moveover.

APRIL IN PARIS!

Treyz on Carpet for Fabian Seg As Dodd Takes on the TV Prexies

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, Jan. 30.

The Sen. Thomas J. Dodd Subcommittee investigating sexy violence and violent sex on television is back in business, and the current motivation appears to be to make network presidents put the finger on who's responsible for allowing such things to go out on the air.

This leaves web toppers the alternative of assuming the blame or taking the position that things go on at lower levels in their companies which they don't know about.

ABC-TV Oliver Treyz has already been called on the carpet, with all the quesitoning centered on the Dec. 3 "Bus Stop" segment, "A Lion Walks Among Us," starring Fabian and dealing with lust, brutal murder, adultery and suicide.

Treyz elected to take the blame under questioning by a college psychologist, of all people. The Dodd Subcommittee has hired as a consultant Dr. Ralph J. Garry, Boston Univ. expert in educational psychology. Garry did all the quizzing of Treyz. And while the Thursday (25) afternoon session drew a number of highranking broadcasters away from the Federal Communications Commission network hearings (which ran simultaneously) to see what Dodd had up his sleeve, the hearing seemed to be of little interest to U.S. Senators. In fact, Dodd was the only Senator who attended the session.

Treyz said he had the power ot keep the Fabian episode off his web, and the decision on what to do was one of the most difficult he ever had to make. He took the unusual step, he recalled, of screening the program for all alfiliates in advance to permit each to decide whether to carry it. Roughly 75% fo them said they would carry it.

This, he said, strongly influenced his decision, along with a desire not to undercut the creative talent which had put together the story of passion and brutality. The beginning and end of the Fabian program were screened in the subcommittee's hearing room.

Disclosed for the first time was a last-minute maneuver by Television Code officials on the Dec. 3 program. Code director Robert D. Swezey rushed off a telegram to Treyz 48 hours before the Fabian program went on the air saying Code officials had been denied the right to see the show in advance by ABC's New York office. Treyz, who was in San Francisco at the time, didn't reply to Swezey until after the segment had been telecast nationally.

Later, Edward H. Bronson of the Code staff notified ABC that the "Bus Stop" segment "seemed to us to be outside the spirit and intent of the Television Code in theme, execution and characterization."

ABC didn't agree. But by that time, the program had been seen nationally and there wasn't much left to argue about.

Dodd took occasion to remind Treyz when he had been before the same subcommittee some six months before, he had argued that additional federal regulation of programming was unnecessary.

"You said," Dodd remembered, "tv could clean its own house if we left everything to the industry. You particularly stressed the work of NAB and the Television Code. Now, we have an instance where you wouldn't even permit the Code people to see a show about which they had received complaints."

David Levy a Witness

David Levy, former NBC-TV programmnig v.p. who lost his job last August, was another witness, but he had nothing critical to say about anyone and wasn't asked any questions about his days with NBC. But it was Levy's second appearance before the Dodd group, and no one knows exactly what he had to say the first time.

On Sept. 6, Levy appeared before the subcommittee in closed se . . . The transcript has not been released.

His testimony in the public session spoke generously of his talents and accomplishments and noted pointly that no reason has even been given for his dismissal by NBC.

Another session of the Dodd group will be called in a week or two with toppers from CBS and NBC to be supoenaed. Dodd wants men with the title of president.

Ike Tops Celeb List On TV-AM Spots For Heart Assn. Campaign

General Dwight D. Eisenhower tops a list of celebs appearing in film and radio spots for use during the annual Heart Fund campaign, Feb. 1-28.

The former President and honorary chairman of the American Heart Assn. board of directors had his message filmed at his home in Gettysburg.

Other radio, tv, deejay and special audience materials were recently reviewed at a Friars Club meeting of the Heart Committee of the Broadcasting Industry, chaired by Sylvester (Pat) Weaver, of McCann-Erickson; James Aubrey of CBS-TV; and Joe Floyd, of KELO, Sioux Falls, S.D. These Heart Fund productions include eight 15-minute "Heart Circuit Interviews" which star, LaVern Baker, Tony Bennett, Van Cliburn, Rosemary Clooney, Bobby Darin, Eileen Farrell, Ella Fitzgerald and Connie Francis. The informal interviews are packaged with scripted questions for use "live" by local DJ's.

Hal Marc Arden is radio-tv-film director of the organization.

Another campaign series, "Heart of a Song," contains six five-minute transcribed programs in which individual personalities narrate the behind-the-scenes stories of how some of our popular songs came to be written. Narrators on the dramatic stories behind the hits are Bobby Darin, Eileen Farrell, George Jessel, Robert Preston, Patti Page, Meredith Wilson and George Burns. Program hosts for the series are Vincent Price and Maurice Evans.

Other headliners who have recorded spots for the radio-tv Heart Fund campaign include: Marlon Brando, Richard Burton, Deborah Kerr, Peggy Lee, Mary Martin, Paul Newman, Polly Bergen, Milton Berle, Shirley Booth, Jimmy Durante, Garry Moore, Jose Ferrer, Jane Fonda, Jackie Gleason, Jack Lemmon, Gordon MacRae, Richard Rodgers and Shelley Winters.

A Spanish language kit for stations featuring Spanish programs, also has been prepared and distributed by the Heart Assn. Another kit, designed for stations which specialize in programming for Negro audiences, features spot announcements by Harry Belafonte, Lena Horne, Nat King Cole, Brook Benton, and others.

Still Another Aspirant For British Com'l Radio

London, Jan. 30.

With still some months to go before the committee looking into the future of British broadcasting under Sir Harry Pilkington makes its views known, yet another company has been formed which hopes to supply London with commercial radio.

Michael Claff, prime exec in the company, Radio London, states that he hopes to set up a main station in the Capital which would feed programs of national interest to local commercial stations. Advertising on the station would be limited to 7% of broadcasting time.

Meantime, BBC has completed a further "dummy run" of local broadcasting, this time in Durham, a northern city, to establish a pattern for local radio programming in the hope that the government will grant it an extension of sound broadcasting in 1964 when the present charter expires.

McGannon Opens Drive For Radio Free Europe Kitty of $11,000,000

Charlotte, Jan. 30.

With Soviet Russia stepping up its propaganda offensive to all parts of the world via radio, Donald H. McGannon, Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. prexy, urged extension of the "Radio Free Europe concept of privately supported, people-to-people radio to include Africa, the Near East, Asia, Southeast Asia and Latin America." McGannon spoke here yesterday (Mon.) at a Radio Free Europe fundraising dinner.

He pointed out that by 1959, the Communist bloc had increased its broadcast hours to Western Europe from 238 hours in 1948 to 837 hours per week. But large as this boost is, McGannon stated that Communist propaganda to Europe now represents only 29% of their total effort, whereas in 1948, it occupied 40% of their total propaganda effort.

McGannon noted that the Soviets were using some U.S. broadcasting techniques in its pitch. "Foremost in their arsenal of devices is the big radio quiz contest," he said. This angle, used originally in 1957 in a show aimed at the Arab areas, has now been extended throughout the world.

McGannon said that the Voice of America broadcasts were not enough to stem the propaganda onslaught of Soviets. The fund drive for Radio Free Europe is aiming at an $11,000,000 kitty.

LIBERTY MUTUAL'S 500G SPORTS BUY

Liberty Mutual Insurance Co. has come into television for the first time via a buy into ABC-TV's "Wide World of Sports," starting Sunday (4). The company's 10-week participation will consist of a series of commercials, ranging from one to two minutes, featuring real automobile crashes staged by daredevil stunt driver, Joie Chitwood.

It's a $500,000 buy for the insurance company, making it the major sponsor on the 90-minute show. Biz was placed through BBDO.

Radio Review

GOLDEN AGE OF POPULAR MUSIC
With William B. Williams
Producer: Vincent Rowe
60 Mins., Mon., 7 p.m.
WNEW, N.Y.

Through the past decade of rock 'n' roll supremacy, there has been a growing nostalgia for the recorded music of the 1930s and 1940s especially among the plus-teeners. The nostalgia for the good old days, or "The Golden Age of Popular Music," as WNEW has labelled its new 13-week series is warranted as attested by the solid sound that came over the airways on the kickoff show.

The bands, the singers, the arrangements and the tunes were based on a strong musical foundation and hold up on a programming schedule 20 and 30 years later. The vintage disks aren't freak items either, and offer more than just a trip down memory lane. They have long-lasting value and lots of appeal.

Opening show, for instance, spotlighted Helen Forrest with Artie Shaw's orch, Martin Tilton with Benny Goodman's combo, Kay Starr with Charley Barnet's orch, Ella Fitzgerald with Chick Webb, and Doris Day with Les Brown. That's a string of vocalists and bands that's hard to beat and easy to listen to over and over again.

The program also had some neat pace-change with such personality singers as Fred Astaire and Jane Powell, Irene Dunne, and Bonnie Baker. William B. Williams is the perfect host for this series. He's always shown good taste in his programming material and this sort of show is right up his alley. His palaver adds much to the overall effect.

With such a wealth of disk material to select from the output of the '30s and '40s, the series can't help but be continually enjoyable.

Hearst's New York Journal American didn't take kindly to "CBS Reports-Death in the City Room." Under the headline of "Vast Wasteland Screams Back," tv critic Jack O'Brian lambasted the telecast for practically an entire column.

Said O'Brian: "What CBS conducted for an hour was in effect a wake organized by enemies, not to mourn but to try and elicit comfort cynical overemphasis on what CBS says is wrong with its economic enemy—the press."

On the eve of the telecast, "TV Key Previews" a feature of the New York Journal American, left out any preview of a 10 to 11 p.m. show and the special interest star in listings for the hour went to "Sing Along with Mitch" and "The Untouchables."

Demise of Hearst's Los Angeles Examiner was examined in CBS-TV's "Death in the City Room."

Taft Broadcasting Co. reported a net profit gain of 27% for the third quarter ended Dec. 31 compared with the same period in 1960. Directors declared a regular quarterly dividend of 10 cents a share and an extra dividend of 10 cents and a 2½% stock dividend.

Hulbert Taft Jr., president, said billings of tv stations rebounded in wake of "our change of affiliations to the ABC network, notably in our Birmingham and Cincinnati operations." He reported progress and earnings for a recently acquired bowling subsidiary in Cincinnati.

The company has 1,540,804 shares outstanding and Taft was authorized by the board to investigate the matter of listing its stock on the New York Exchange.

Chi WGN's New Radio Image

first quarter, and (2) that it increased its ratecard in certain periods of the day around mid-year.

The programming format had followed closely that of the previous year, with only a single significant change. Wally Phillips was shifted from evening time to a morning berth, causing the ratings to virtually double from 9:05 to 11 a.m. Business, naturally, was bettered accordingly.

By what magic did WGN improve itself so tellingly in five years? Says Gates, "Only by effecting, rather than affecting, true balanced programming and a sense of service." To illustrate the former, he notes that the station's music ranges from the "Barn Dance" Saturday nights to the Texaco-sponsored Metropolitan Opera broadcasts; again, from the rural-oriented "County Fair" to the Illinois Opera Auditions of the Air. The greater concentration is, of course, on current and evergreen pops.

As Gates relates it, the station's image really began changing noticeably around four years ago when WGN spirited away the Chicago Cubs baseball schedule from WIND. Along with Chicago Bears football in the fall-winter season, that pretty well iced up its sports identity.

Slightly earlier, the indie hoisted its mainsail on the service front when it initiated traffic reports from a helicopter in this market. The flying machine became an advertisement for the station every rush hour, and the late Flying Officer Leonard Baldy, who died in a trafficopter crash a few years ago, almost immediately established himself as one of the most colorful and best known radio personalities in town.

The trafficopter reports soon made it a competitive necessity for other AM stations here to broadcast driving information. Each devised its own methods of obtaining the traffic dope, but WGN is still the only one that gets it firsthand from the air.

When WLS gave up its farm service broadcasting to go with a new "urbanized" sound, WGN picked up the rural programming, installing "Milking Time" in the morning, "Country Fair" at noon and "Barn Dance" for 90 minutes on Saturday nights. Says Gates, "We know that 'Country Fair' brings down our ratings at the noon hour six days a week, but we feel we owe that kind of programming to our area coverage."

Three years ago, an all-night show was incepted, putting WGN on a 24-hour a day operation. It has proved another shot in the arm, both for revenues and ratings.

Apropos balance, the station is second only to WBBM for the amount of live programs it originates, and its roster of personalities admixes such long-established names as Pierre Andre, Holland Engle and Franklyn MacCormack with such relative fresh talents as Jack Quinlan, Jack Taylor and the aforementioned Wally Phillips.

Its public service efforts include 39 newscasts and 14 trafficopter reports daily; "Time to Reflect," a five-minute inspirational program seven days a week; "Signal 10," which has won the Alfred P. Sloan award for three straight years; "Northwestern Reviewing Stand," one of the longest running discussion shows on radio; "Family Theatre," a Catholic half-hour; and weekly concerts by the Fifth Army Band.

P.S.—WGN, and its sister tv station, will receive the Broadcast Pioneers "Mike Award" for distinguished broadcasting in New York next month.

of the first-run biz is the diminished pool of regional and local advertisers riding syndication properties. It can be argued that this may be due to changing sponsorship patterns, the quality of syndication entries, etc. Time and again, though, agencies, advertisers and syndicators will rebut most arguments with a rather forceful contention that local and regional advertisers, even if they liked the show, can't and could not find a good prime evening time slots. It's the tight local time situation, more than any other factor, syndicators argue that has disenchanted regional and local sponsors away from syndie fare.

'Beany' & 'Hobo'

of getting Bob Clampett's "Beany" from live to animation with no success whatsoever. After investigating hundreds of available properties, Eells UAA's backing gave the half interest. Eells asked for a 60-day option, then went out and sold the show in the ABC-Mattel toy $2,000,000, two-year deal.

But before taking the option, Eells spent months in research, checking the show's local and syndie ratings (some 30 markets via kinnies) and advertising renewal record. He also discovered that "Beany" comic books had enormous sales in the video locations. It was a proven property on all grounds, and he had a good story when he approached the web and advertiser.

Eells feels his "Littlest Hobo" has the same proven qualities. It's a low-budget feature that clicked with critics and public. The feature about a German Shepherd named London (he'll be called Knight in the video version) was produced by McGowan Productions with which Television Artists & Producers has an exclusive contract. Eells says a good 30-minute pilot has been cut out of the feature, and he and the producers can bring in the regular half-hour for well under the going price—in color if desired. He figures the show a natural for the hard-to-program 6 to 8 p. m. hours.

The proposed strip for daytime with Renzo Cesana is currently on KTLA-TV, L. A., and Eells says for other markets are close to signing.

The deal with the giant Shaw Bros. theatre interests in Hong Kong is for color production of "Americanamation," stanzas based on American history. Other animated shows are in blueprint.

West German Pastor Would Keep All Kids Under 6 Away From TV

Frankfurt, Jan. 30.

Pastor Heinz Wilhelm, of Kaiserslautern, one of West Germany's leading Protestant churchmen, has just levelled a blast against children viewing television in West Germany.

At a West German churchmen's meeting themed "In Boycott of the Modern Mass Media," Pastor Wilhelm noted that films, radio and television are teaching the young people immorality, cruelty, brutality.

Children under the age of six are forbidden to go to any films in West Germany, and the Protestant church leader urged that the same ban be applied to television—no viewing at all for the children under six.

He urged, too, that similar censorship for older children be utilized with the television. The films are censored for age groups in this country, so that they are banned for under 12, under 16, or under 18. He said that children under 14 should not watch any television for more than three-quarters of an hour daily, and that the evening shows be restricted to adults only.

Mex Heat Off U.S. Crime Vidpix With 14 New Series Set for Preem

Mexico City, Jan. 30.

Although there still is some pressure and criticism of American made episodics featuring violence and other allegedly objectionable themes, the heat definitely is off.

Far from any threat of a possible reduction of American episodics, Mexican channels will be featuring more north of the border shows. At least 14 new series will preem over Mexican homescreens, with each having an initial run of 26 segments.

While the Chamber of Deputies rapidly pushed through reforms to the Radio and Television Law proposed by Deputy Carlos Loret de Mola (an ex-Televicentro commentator), the Mexican Senate was not in a hurry to approve the drastic changes. In any case, the Senate received the Deputy approved regulations Dec. 29, just two days before shutdown of the Mexican legislative year.

Reforms will come up for Senate debate this September when sessions are resumed, but insider betting is that de Mola's drastic proposals calling for suppression of shows featuring violence, immorality, etc., will undergo equally drastic revisions. Senate may approve some cutback in filmed series and an inside source indicated that senators are all for suppression of "vulgarity" over Mexican channels and a boosting of cultural values. However, there is no indication of any major bid to sweep clean American shows from Mexican channels.

In any case, distributors are supplying lighter and more wholesome fare in new negotiations, and there will be a gradual reduction of violence and realism.

Deputy de Mola, obviously gunning for suppression of around 40 American produced shows for one reason or another, does not have 100% backing from the industry. As Juan Duran y Casahonda, Televicentro publicity chief pointed out, crime, adultery and other social ills exist with or without the attacked series depicting violence, moral degeneration, etc. This is more or less opinion of sponsors and advertising agencies as well as officials. There has to be some toning down, it is generally admitted, but not along the sweeping lines proposed by de Mola.

A curious legal point in this controversey of American shows allegedly damaging to Mexican young and old alike is fact that de Mola has formulated reforms for a Law that has not yet been invoked. Already industry executives are asking: "how do you reform a Law which has not been put into practice?"

able to the "pool" (not on how many hours the regions take). Further frustration for telepix sellers is that although Britain's local outlets must originate 15% of their schedule, foreign vidfilms bought independently do not count against this quota—except in two regions.

The two areas to which this rule doesn't apply are TWW and Scottish-TV and that's because of a contractual loophole which ITA tied up before issuing further licenses. TWW has taken advantage of the legal wrinkle and is currently screening "87th Precinct" against its 15% quota.

But, in the main, the area stations take their eight hours of foreign product from the "network pool" at an even cheaper rate than it would cost to buy direct.

KTTV's $500,000 Modernization

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

A $500,000 modernization program for KTTV was disclosed here by Robert W. Breckner, veepee and general manager of the Los Angeles Times-owned station.

The program includes the purchase of new EMI image orthicon cameras from England, first to be used in the U. S. They will be operational early in February, and will be used for videotaping of blurbs and shows as well as for special live shows.

Station has acquired a "satellite" camera and transmitter unit for special events and sports coverage. The camera, transmitter and power batteries, weighing less than 100 pounds altogether, will be delivered early this month and will be in operation before the end of February.

KTTV's videotaping facilities will be thoroughly modernized, with newly developed AMPTEC equipment being added to the channel's four Ampex machines. The station's scattered control rooms are being moved to a central location. Equipment is being modernized.

A new communications center for use in special events coverage will be constructed, providing programming and engineering with shortwave communications with the station's six mobile units. KTTV is building a new four-wheel-drive mobile unit to reach areas not easily accessible. Stage six will be nearly doubled in space.

A station executive will be named this week to head the channel's expansion of videotape and film production fields.

Liggett & Myers and Great Western Savings and Loan Assn. recently signed with KTTV as year-round sponsors of its special events package.

WITI-TV's Editorials

Milwaukee, Jan. 30.

WITI-TV, the Storer station here, next week will begin presenting editorials on a five-a-week basis. Each editorial will be aired three times daily, following the key newscasts. They'll be delivered by Carl Zimmermann, news and pubaffairs director for the ABC affil here.

The daily editorials are in line with Storer policy.

Television Reviews

10:30 p.m. prime time, then chronicled one after another to prove the area's supremacy in the field of medicine in the past century. Investigating the fields of clinical care, medical education and research, it pointed out that there are 108 hospitals, three leading medical schools, Harvard, Tufts, B.U., in addition to two dental schools plus several outstanding schools for medical technologists, X ray technicians, physical therapists and pharmacists.

Most dramatic highlight of the entire half hour was film of two actual operations, one an example of the new open heart surgery that corrects congenital defects while the patient is kept alive by the remarkable new pacemaker or heart machine; and the other, the even newer neutron therapy treatment of brain tumors.

Among leading medicos interviewed were: Dr. William H. Sweet, Mass. General Hospital neurosurgical chief, who described his own brain surgery technique; Dr. Samuel Proger, physician in chief at Pratt Clinic of New England Center Hospital, who correlated the roles of hospitals and education in the advance of medicine; and Dr. David Wallwork, prexy of Mass. Medical Society. It was an outstanding production for NNAC-TV. Guy.

SEMINAR ON AMERICAN STRATEGY
With Rep. Walter H. Judd. Sen. Richard B. Russell, Sen. Thomas Dodd. Sen. Herman E. Talmadge, Dr. Frank Burnett, Maj. William B. Mayer
Producers, Editors: Buddy Ray, Dale Clark
Director: Bob Doty
60 mins., Wednesday
WAGA-TV, Atlanta; WALB-TV, Albany, Ga; WRBL, Columbus, Ga.; WMAZ-TV, Macon, Ga. (tape)

WAGA-TV, Storer chain outlet here, recently carried Hollywood's Answer to Communism," and when Minnesota's Rep. Walter H. Judd came here to participate in a Seminar on American Strategy, sponsored by the Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia, it was only natural that the station should have its cameras on the scene to videotape proceedings.

They got enough material for this 60-min. program. Seminar at the Atlanta Biltmore Hotel was attended by some 800 educational and political leaders.

Rep. Judd was introduced by Georgia's Senior Sen. Richard B. Russell, who also acted as moderator. (Rep. Judd's address and the openings remarks of the seminar were carried live on WAGA-TV.)

Georgia's Gov. Ernest Vandiver participated and Lt. Gov. Garland Byrd introduced Frank R. Barnett, research director for Richardson Foundation, was a principal speaker at seminar.

Another program participant was Maj. William Mayer, United States representative at the Panmunjon negotiations with the Communists in Korea. Special guests at the seminar were members of Georgia's General Assembly, now in session.

Dale Clark, WAGA-TV's director of Public Affairs, did the spieling to give the program continuity.

While a show of this sort can be less than exciting, it's the kind of material that deserves presentation to fank and file America to awaken them to the dangers that Communism poses.

All speakers participating in the seminar sounded a warning that needs heeding and WAGA-TV and the participating stations deserve credit for carrying the message. Lucc.

PROFESSOR TORANNE
With Mavor Moore, Tony Van Bridge, Marigold Charlesworth
Producer-Director: Mario Prizek
Writer: Arthur Adamov
30 Mins., Sun., 10:30 p.m.
CBC-TV, from Toronto

This fantasy, based on a recurring dream theme received in Mario Prizek's production, some of the best technical dream effects since James Cruze's film of Kaufman & Connelly's "Beggar on Horseback."

A distinguished prof was accused by some children of stripping in front of them and was hailed into a police station. Various people he knew drifted in, but each failed to recognize him—except one, who said he was a rival prof—and one girl accused him of trying to pick her up. After all vanished in a dream swirl he was in another station, accused of loitering and littering a beach where he confessed he changed carefully in public, having forgotten his money. A notebook he said was fully turned out half-blank; he got a letter firing him for lecturing too long and boringly—just after he'd boasted how people stayed for hours to listen to him—and for plagiarizing his rival's material, which he fumblingly attempted to explain. Buffeted by low blows to psyche and id, he finally, compulsively, began to undress. Fadeout.

It was almost a one-man show, with one of Canada's top character actors, Mavor Moore, doing an amazing job as the prof—incredulous, bewildered, bragging, cajoling, devastated, demolished. Handsome blonde, Marigold Charlesworth, was admirably stylized and cold as his most articulate accuser, and Tony Van Bridge was solid as the detective who first questions him. An offbeat, limited appeal show but a honey, with camera and lighting eerily effective throughout.

Next show in the "Quest" series has an adaptation of Jack Kerouac's beatnik saga "On the Road," starring Bruno Gerussi. Gard.

WHAT YOU DON'T KNOW
With Phyllis Knight; Dr. William J. Martin
Producer-Director: Bob Pilkington
30 Mins., Thurs. 10:30 p.m.
WHAS-TV, Louisville

Tackling an important health problem, and with expert advice from a local proctologist, Dr. William J. Martin, this 30-minute report called a spade without any glossing over, and answered many questions which may have been in the minds of viewers. Point was made in this program, that colonic cancer is the biggest cause of cancer deaths. Last year, 69,000 men and women contracted this type of cancer; 39,000 of whom will die because it was not discovered in time.

It is common knowledge that the word "cancer" immediately sends a freeze through persons who have a fear of the word. This program explained that a visit to a physician for an examination, which only takes a few minutes; is entirely painless, might discover the start of a condition which could eventually result in death.

Report also featured the world tv premiere of an American Cancer Society film, with actual demonstrations of examinations and cancers in various stages of growth. A patient (male) who had the examination made, and who detailed the simplicity of the procedure in discovering the beginning of the cancer cells, and the painless treatment, provided strong arguments for an early examination and treatment, should evidence of the beginning of a cancer be discovered. Considerable mail response has come in on the show, and Phyllis Knight, station's home director, tactfully and in a dignified manner questioned Dr. Martin, a recognized authority on the subject. Most of her questions were made off camera, with the emphasis on Dr. Martin's professional and knowledgeable explanations.

Station's policy is that social taboos which contribute to a problem of such importance, must not be allowed. This program could mean the saving of lives, and was a bold step in public service. Bob Pilkington was credited with production and director chores, and camera crew turned in a top notch job. Wied.

CARTE BLANCHE
With Lloyd Robertson, Connie-Gail Feller, Brian Browne Trio, Guests
Producer-Director: Pierre Normandin
60 Mins.; 11:37 p.m., Wed.
CBOT, Ottawa

For a local-only stint, the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s Ottawa office has poured plenty money and people into their late open-ender, and come up with the framework for a potentially solid revue-style stanza. Opener lacked spark and slickness, but that may come with experience. Evidently the show's budget is hefty. Pierre Normandin is to handle the producer-direction chores. Elaborate sets were designed in a nitery theme by newcomer Barabara Reilley, listed as just in from Ireland. String of guests covered music, comedy and sports to support regulars—staffer Lloyd Robertson, who held the show together with continuity gab and some interview; Brian Browne Trio, slick jazz threesome, and local looker Connie-Gail Feller who brings to the show notoriety collected last year when she was deposed as Miss Canada.

Carte Blanche replaces a previous late open-ender, Nightcap, which shuttered three weeks ago from an attack of screen anemia. Of the regulars, Miss Feller is obviously around to contribute youth, freshness and charm, and this she does admirably. Her interview with light-heavyweight champ Archie Moore (taped) indicated she should be restricted to the charm slot.

Ruth Walker, w.k. via niteries and networks, held star billing on the opener and contributed the show's only spot of professionally slick showmanship. Next to Miss Walker's performance ranked the warble bits of The Group of Four, local foursome debuting on video, exhibiting solid ability to make nice sounds. Judy McNally is the chirper, with males Charlie Kerr, John Laidlaw and John Raymond.

From CBC's French web were Jacques Normand and Roger Baulu, veteran toppers in French video. Their stint was confined to table talk with Miss Feller and Robertson, filled with gags using personal and French-web themes which fell flat on viewers. Better they had let the pair caper alone.

Bright item was a sports chore between Ed McCabe, w.k. locally as sports writer and gabber, and Hughie Riopelle, sportsman. They told witty stories of local golf and hockey people and Riopelle closed with a Twist.

Carte Blanche, with loose ends tidied and more spark added, will make a neat Wednesday night session. Gorm.

NBC White Paper

Al Wasserman, who once was a CBS-TV producer and now is a key producer on the "NBC White Paper" series, has a genius for collating and editing the pertinent into cohesive and interesting public affairs program material. He and his director-reporter Arthur Zegart did it again in a fine hour-long study of the welfare problem Sunday (28) on NBC-TV.

"Battle of Newburgh" studied a topic, now several months old and much discussed by other journalists—the get-tough public welfare policy of Newburgh city manager Joseph Mitchell—and yet the program was done astutely and with a surprising sense of drama. Surprising beeause viewers don't often get to see the kind of emotionalism displayed by some of the people who appeared as interviewees. One scene, of a young, able bodied father whose entire family was arbitrarily denied welfare aid even though he could not find a job, any job, was a classic. Ordinarily, watching a man break down and cry is a bore and this might have been too, even though the man had obvious cause to cry (his children were starving) yet Wasserman managed to append this scene at just the right place in Zegart's pictorial thesis so that it packed tremendous punch.

About six months ago, under producer Gordon Hyatt, WCBS-TV, N.Y., did a half-hour study of the situation, "The Newburgh Dilemma." The station reporter Robert Schakne did a brilliant job, but it seems he had no trouble finding people to interview. Zegart did, because he started later, and it took him six months to do his job as a result. The time and the effort were well worth it. Incidentally, Zegart, like Schakne before him, found fault in Mitchell's program, not so much because it's easy to side with the little guy but instead because digging only suggested a high degree of malevolence, cupidity and stupidity in the way Newburgh set about cutting down its welfare roles.

A great deal of intelligence and bravery was poured into this "White Paper." Indeed, there have been intelligence and bravery in most of the previous ones. Art.

The Ernie Kovacs Special

Ernie Kovacs' final show, taped a few weeks before he was killed in an auto accident on the Coast Jan. 12 and shown on ABC-TV last Tuesday night (23) was a perfectly appropriate memorial to his protean talent.

In an era of conformity, Kovacs was an authentic original who tilted at cliches and complacency with his zany comic vision. Actor, writer, director and producer of this season's tv shows, Kovacs had no alibis and needed none. If each bit was not always successful, Kovacs at least was always fresh. The only thing one could expect from him was a surprise.

His last show was a good sample of the Kovacs style. A playful sequence with the fluttering of an oscilloscope to the sound of music led into a takeoff on an oldfashioned melodrama in which the rich heavy triumphs over the bohemian hero for the damsel's hand. A sketch with a double-talking poet thrust sharply at longhair pretentiousness, while a routine with a rustic female painter was a nifty abstract expressionist takeoff on Grandma Moses. A sketch with a mad sculptor, played by Kovacs, was in a more slapstick vein. Quickie blackouts like the detergent dissolving a kitchen sink, were a consistent Kovacs specialty.

Because Dutch Masters Cigars, sponsors of the Kovacs specials, eliminated all commercials, there was time for a final look at the comedian's famed Nairofi Trio. As usual, the final credit roll was a brilliant exercise in the offbeat. Herm.

Perspective on Greatness

Charles A. Lindbergh and his turbulent times were the subject of the second outing of "Perspective on Greatness," telecast Friday (26) night on WOR-TV, N.Y., from 9:30 to 10:30.

In many ways, "The Crowded Idol—Charles A. Lindbergh," was a fascinating glimpse at a man and his times. It could have been a better hour if the story had been less padded and the narration less glib. The soundtrack, as produced by Hearst Metrotone News, suffered the tired cliches so often heard in the narration of movie newsreels. The better tv documentaries have graduated from many of the movie newsreel cliches.

It was amazing what a lift the venerable H. V. Kaltenborn gave to the outing. Kaltenborn's few comments introducing segments of the program seemed much fresher and incisive than a good deal of the narration that followed.

The hour, though, proved interesting—and at some points exciting indeed. Covered in the hour were the three major phases of Lindbergh's life—his historic flight, the tragic kidnapping, and his isolationism role. Story picked him up as a young dare-devil pilot and left him being honored for his wartime efforts.

The most exciting part of the footage—and the most tragic—was the segment dealing with the kidnapping and the Hauptmann trial.

British Equity

proposals—which, says the union, could be put into operation without affecting the broader dispute on method of paying network fees—but are unable to do so because they are dominated by the majors.

This being the case, the actors say, the commercial tv outlets are not "wholly independent" of each other as required by law.

Economic burden of program costs has led to unofficial affiliations of regional companies to one or other of the four majors, sources reveal. For instance, ABC-TV "sponsors" Ulster-TV, Westward-TV and Grampian TV; Associated Tele-Vision does likewise to Scottish-TV and Southern-TV; Granada fathers TWW and Border. TeleVision does likewise to Scotent of such affiliation.)

From the contractors' point of view, it is understood they have gone as far as they intend to go with pay increase offers. One executive states: "It's now entirely up to Equity to make the moves. We would all like the strike settled but we are in no trouble for programming yet, nor will we be for a long time to come."

Certainly there has been only a slight decline in the network's audience since the dispute stopped all but 20 Equity members from working in the commercial medium. Old films seem to have filled the gap while the popular light entertainment shows are still top o' the tree.

And the deadlock is still very much on.

CBS' Moscow Man at Canaveral

society that would not do it any other way, even if it had the choice. The other, in Baikonur, deep in Soviet Central Asia, is a reflection of a closed society. Even if the Russians would prefer to open their missile testing site to reporters from foreign lands, they still have preferred not to—probably because they are more concerned about a neatly-tailored propaganda image of flawless scientific perfection than about an uncut look at the complicated and fascinating process leading up to the launching of a Yurf Gagarin or a Gherman Titov.

It is the American reporter, sitting in Moscow, glued to his radio, entranced by his Tass machine, who serves as a wind of transmission belt for conveying this image to his public. Unfortunately, he cannot check anything Pravda or Moscow Radio says; fortunately, he can interpret Pravda and hopefully bring some perspective and balance to its reports.

No western reporter, permanently accredited in Moscow to the Foreign Ministry, has ever had a chance to witness a Soviet launching. But, a few days before a launching, hints begin to appear. Communist reporters, who coexist (sort of) with their Western colleagues get the word to stay close to their radios for an important announcement. "Space?" they are asked. "Who knows?" they answer affirmatively.

Buck Rogers-type stories appear in the Soviet press frequently; about flights to the moon, week-long journeys around the earth, about life on Mars. These stories excite curiosity. Checks are made at the Moscow Planetarium for any new space exhibits. The Academy of Sciences is bombarded with inquiries, but, characteristically, you are provided with very little enlightenment. Finally, a reporter's intuitive juices begin to flow. He can almost sense that something's in the air. He might even be lucky—and get tipped off by a Russian friend to stay "very close" to his radio "tomorrow morning."

When the Russians decide the time is right, they give the nod to Moscow Radio to make the announcement. And, from then on, the reporter had best keep a radio close by to keep abreast of Tass' running reports on the cosmonaut's progress as well as a close eye on his television screen to catch a glimpse—and it's only that—of the cosmonaut from a still picture flashed across the screen. Unsurprisingly, the reporter then quickly gets submerged in an ocean of Tass releases—many prepared in advance—all devoted to strengthening the image across the world of Russia's scientific prowess.

The contrast between reporting on space in Russia and in the United States is overwhelming. For a reporter accustomed to the extraordinary secrecy surrounding every Soviet space effort, it seems almost indiscreet to be so close to Astronaut Glenn's Mercury-Atlas space vehicle. Something might go wrong. In Russia, you'd never know. Only the triumphs are reported—and they are reported in the way that Moscow Radio or Pravda wants to tell it.

You can check nothing. You cannot go to the launching sites located 2,800 miles from Moscow. Secrecy is the order of the day. No one ever knew who Gagarin or Titov were—before Pravda introduced them.

Moscow is really the worst kind of preparation for Canaveral — where everything is wide-open — a reflection of the open society that this is.

Radio Jingles

separate commercials during peak listening time; to cue in d.j. shows and individual tunes and in other ways. Another wrinkle is to use just the musical "bed," without vocal, behind spoken announcements, i.e. pubserv spots, weather spots, t.d.'s, etc.

Within the last year, an entirely new approach has been given jingle production, that of tailoring the jingles to specific program formats. Largest selling jingle package in the industry, Golden Era Jingles, produced by IMN Productions, for example, features jingles done to the top pop sellers of all times and going a step further, produces each jingle arrangement in the same musical style as the orchestra or vocalist who made the tune a standard.

Specialization

Another development was jingle specialization. Producers introduced a wide variety of gimmicks—jingles written for specific holidays, i.e. July 4, Memorial Day, for Negro stations; for r & r stations; middle of the road programmers and the like.

Going a step further, Target Jingles has just introduced its "Hit Intro Package" (HIP). HIP takes 10 of each month's top sellers and writes a jingle specifically designed for each tune, allowing platter spinners to start of with the jingle, segue directly into the tune and speed the station's program tempo. HIP even has a twist jingle.

As is true of most jingle packages, HIP not only "tailors" its jingles to individual station call letters but frequently to local schools, sports teams or civic orgs, enabling the station to effect major local promotions. HIP is also the first jingle package to "tailor" on a monthly basis.

Largest company in the jingle field is the Peter Frank Organization, Inc. (PFO), which owns Stars International, producers of "The Big Sound;" "Target Jingles; IMN Productions; Formatic Radio, combination syndication and jingle service, and Richard H. Ullman, Inc., distribution subsidiary. Ullman, as sales org for the various jinglerias, last year introduced the greatest number of such packages in the field, including a new Golden Era package; One-Derful Radio; A Country and Western package for blue grass stations; Soundsational and Jet Jingles, among others.

Most other jingle producers average around four packages a year. Other leaders in the field include Pams, Futursonic and CRC; all headquartered in Dallas; Sande & Green on the Coast and Roy Ross in New York.

A vital factor in jingle sales success is that few stations can afford to lay out the kind of coin it requires to produce their own exclusive jingle packages. Exceptions are WNEW, New York; KFWB, Los Angeles and a handful of others. Such special one-station packages range in cost from $15,000 to $30,000, also the price tag on a syndicated jingle package. After initial production, syndicators still must pay the vocal groups for individual station "tailoring." Another key to the jingle success story is that syndication permits the producer to lay out large production costs, recovering by individual market sales, same theory as holds true for tv syndication. Only difference is that jingle syndication is going up—and no one knows for sure where vidpic syndication is headed.

Restore Braden To British Equity Fold

London, Jan. 30.

Bernard Braden, actor who was expelled from Equity after signing a contract with Associated Television for work after Nov. 1, when the union's layoff officialy began, is back in the Equity fold. Decision to reinstate Braden as a fully fledged member came after he presented his case to a mass meeting of actors in London's Theatre Royal.

Equity general council decided, however, that the net amount of Braden's earnings from some 10 appearances in ATV's "The Time, The Place and The Camera"—estimated at about $4,000—should constitute a fine for his action. Money is almost certainly destined to swell the "strike fund" kept going by voluntary donations from in-work artists.

Even though his expulsion from the union has cost him two film and one play offer, Braden considers's penalty to be "eminently fair."

Atlanta—First annual Public Safety Award of Atlanta Chapter Sigma Delta Chi, journalism fraternity, was presented to Elmos Ellis, program director for WSB Radio, South's oldest radio station. As manager of programming, production and news, Ellis was cited for his contributions as a newsman for the benefits of public safety during 1961.

What Will TV Networks Do For An Encore on Canaveral Manshoot?

If Col. John Glenn Jr. and his Atlas aren't impeded again by poor weather over Cape Canaveral and the networks do get their picture stories of the orbital flight, it will be fascinating to see if the internetwork tv rivalry develops further along the lines it set for itself last Saturday (27) morning before the shot was called off.

By shifting the dial frequently, a viewer got the impression that from 6:30 a.m. on, all three networks, ABC-TV, CBS-TV and NBC-TV, were doing their utmost to cover the manshoot preparations as interestingly as possible. There was no shirking. Everybody had cameras and reporters everywhere. It was like a regimental competition for a prize in military logistics. But for all of the compatibly arrayed masses of strength, the networks, in strange ways, did express their individual characteristics, at least two of them did prominently: NBC and ABC.

It is no secret that NBC, having 'won" the other manshoot stories by dint of favorable critical evaluations and larger audiences, was trying to protect its frontrunner status. More of a secret, but still discernible, is that the other networks were trying their best to mitigate against anybody being a frontrunner by simply stressing the pool aspects of the affair. But back to NBC: It was obvious that the network was trying to stay out front, which it may well have through audience conditioning, but it got a little pathetic at one point. Pressed by its rivals, NBC had reporter Elmer Peterson, situated in San Diego at a General Dynamics Astronautics tracking station, declare, in effect, that this portion of the coverage was NBC's but that the network was being kind enough to let the other networks participate.

If this self-plug seemed a bit childish, what ABC-TV did was more childish. Faced now with maintaining a purity because of what ABC News vicepresident Jim Hagerty has had to say against faking, the network carried purity to the extreme of puritanism. At about 7:25 a.m., ABC showed a short film four or five minutes, maybe. With its heavy shadings and scenic mobility, it was obviously film. Nobody would have doubted it for a minute, yet the network insulted the intelligence of the viewer by running a continuous caption which said, "Prefilmed." It was not only there every second of the time but it was in the way. Being obvious is not the antithesis of fakery.

The news teams were all on the ball. The best manpower available to each web was used. There were minor technical goofs at various times Saturday morning, only one worthy of mention, however. Walter Cronkite, the CBS anchorman, for a split second, ended up on the NBC feed, when somehow the transmission lines fouled . . . Double-exposure, even so briefly, never hurt anybody.

Now that all of the advance footage has been consumed once, the stuff on Glenn's preparations, the track of his planned orbital flight and so on, it should be fun watching network ingenuity in finding new and exciting ways to build up for the scheduled blastoff, now set for Feb. 13.

British TTT's Scoop

London, Jan. 30.

Tyne-Tees Television, local independent contractor for North East England, stepped into the scramble for non-Equity performers in a big way when it secured Bobby Vee, click U.S. singer, for a local show "Young At Heart."

Program will be Vee's first U.K. video appearance and the signing marks the first time TTT has scooped the British majors. "Young At Heart"—described as a teenage program with mum and dad appeal—teed off earlier this month with Shirley Bassey in the star spot.

TV to Preem In Singapore Oct., '62

Singapore, Jan. 30.

Television would be in Singapore by next October, revealed the Minister for Culture, S. Rajaratnam, in the Legislative Assembly.

Negotiations had begun with the Marconi Wireless and Telegraph Co. and the Marubei Ieda Co., Ltd. of Japan for the supply of equipment for the tv station. Order, when made, to be fair, would be split between the two companies.

The government proposed to purchase a piece of land adjoining the Radio Singapore building at Thomson region to put up television studios. Construction of these studios would take about two years and until their completion semi-permanent buildings would be used.

The Ministry for Culture would spend about $1,955,100 ($5,865,300 Malayan) or £651,700 sterling in the next four years on tv development. Which is more than half of the U.S. $3,599,233 ($10,797,700 Malayan) or £1,199,744 sterling allocated for its expenditure during the four years. Singapore Government is laying great emphasis on television because "it will break the language barrier and fight illiteracy, supplement instruction in schools and help in developing a Malayan culture."

Rajaratnam, in stating the Government's policy regarding the implement of tv here, was answering a query by the Alliance leader, Tun Lim Yew Hock, a former Chief Minister of Singapore of a vote of $600,000 ($1,800,000 Malayan) in the development budget for the coming year 1962 for works, buildings and land acquisition connected with television.

Savants Adler, Hutchins Pitch Up 'Great Idea'

A couple of Chicago University savants, Dr. Mortimer J. Adler and Dr. Robert Hutchins, are pitching a highbrow talk show, "It's A Great Idea," as a commercial tv possibility. Series is based on the "100 Great Books" which Hutchins and Adler introduced as the foundation of the curriculum at Chicago U.

Encyclopedia Britanica Inc., which publishes the "100 Great Books," is packaging the series. The William Morris Agency is trying to sell it.

Everybody Wants Crack at Big, Wide Wonderful World of Pubaffairs

It seems now that everyone would like to get into the tv pubaffairs act. That's attested to by Perry Wolff, pubaffairs producer at CBS-TV. Wolff says that hardly a week goes by now that he doesn't get a call from an outside packager with an idea and a proposition.

Wolff, producer of the Feb. 14 special, "A Tour of the White House with Mrs. John F. Kennedy," now is editing the footage. The Valentine Day special will be telecast by all three webs, NBC-TV on the same night and ABC-TV on a delayed basis two days later. Wolff denied that he was a "pool" producer on the show, saying he worked strictly for CBS-TV. He added that NBC-TV and ABC-TV had observers at the White House during the shooting to see—as he put it—that we didn't sneak CBS' eye symbol in the footage.

As far as moving out of the network fold and joining outside pubaffairs packagers, Wolff said "no; thanks." To the network, pubaffairs specials and series are of consequence and the monies spent for them relatively unlimited, Wolff said. To many outside packagers, the pubaffairs field is an auxiliary biz, of no great consequence, he contended. Wolff further predicted that outside packagers will have trouble securing footage for shows, with the Hollywood film companies preparing to enter the pubaffairs field themselves.

Wolff also is working on CBS-TV's projected series on "Communism, Democracy and the Fate of the Free World," a working title, as well as other projects.

British A-R Wins Six-Year Dispute

London, Jan. 30.

A six-year-old dispute was ended in the Court of Appeal last Monday (22), in favor of Associated-Rediffusion, after a seven-day hearing. Three judges held that the company had not repudiated heads of agreement made with Wick Films Inc., for a series of tv films featuring, among others, Eartha Kitt, Lena Horne, Joni James and Jean Sablon.

Giving judgment, Lord Justice Ormerod held that A-R did not break the contract when it suspended shooting arrangements on learning that Lena Horne might not be available on the day which had been fixed for the start of her films. He further decided that heads of agreement had never come into force, because a condition with the stars in question produced by Wick Films did not comply with those heads of agreement. Concurring judgments were delivered by the other two judges.

Wick Films was ordered to pay the costs of the appeal, and also of the two week's hearing of the first trial in December, 1960.

HTS Bundle to Elk City

Elk City, Jan. 30.

KSWB-TV, Elk City, Okla., has contracted for the entire film library of Hollywood Television Service.

The vault of more than 1,200 films includes 13-minute serial stanzas ("Adventure Serial Theatre of the 50's"), post '50 western feature pix and a large bundle of features, some released theatrically as late as 1959.

HTS general sales manager David Bloom says the firm has sold the entire catalog to single stations before, but never in a lump sum contract.

the officials to get home and in front of the television screens.

Restaurants, guesthouses and beer joints without television were nearly empty, as even the regular club and pub meetings went unattended; while the places with television were packed, although bar service was generally shut down during the tense minutes of the play.

And local newspapers interviewed their police officials as to which one of the 24 members of the cast had committed the two kerchief murders.

But then came the unexpected ending.

Berlin cabarettist and movie producer Wolfgang Neuss took a $250 ad in the Berlin afternoon newspaper Der Abend the day before the final television outcome was played.

His controversial ad read "Advice for tomorrow: Don't stay at home, what use is it? The Kerchief Murder is Dieter Borsche. So, go to the movies Wednesday night. Signed, a cinema fan "Genosse Muenchhausen"!

Neuss' new film, incidentally, is titled "Genosse Muenchhausen" (Comrade Muenchhausen).

But with that little insert, the entire fit started. Every major West German newspaper, including the top circulation tabloid Bild brought headline and front-page stories, asking "Does Wolfgang Neuss know? Is Dieter Borsche the killer?" and repeating the entire ad with info about the television series.

Neuss proved right, but everyone connected with the television series took time out to object to his prediction.

Director Hans Quest who handled the crime show complained, "What Neuss did was absolutely unallowed." Heinz Drache, who played the police inspector, complained, "Neuss sabotaged the work of his colleagues." And "killer" Dieter Borsche (who played the part of the artist in the series) objected, "Such a thing simply isn't done."

Meanwhile, of course, every West German paper played up the battle between the Berlin cabarettist and wit Neuss and the participants of the television program.

Officials of West German television at Cologne, who had prepared the three hours and 35 minutes of the series, speedily announced that they were shortly offering another television series by author Durbridge, titled "Die Welt von Tim Frazer" (The World of Tim Frazer).

Tickets were sold out for every performance of Dieter Borsche's current play in a Hamburg theatre. And film producer Neuss found himself with another gold mine of publicity. He clicked several years ago with his unusual televersion film "Wir Wunderkinder" (We Wonder Children), a pic about several young Germans who managed to survive under the Nazis, the Russians, and the Americans. Because of lack of financing, he made the film first for television, then in a switch generally not allowed in Germany, sold the movie in cinemas, and even sold it in the States.

His final word on the whole squabble—"The people have no humor any more."

But Munich's Infratest poll showed that as many as 75% of West Germany's close to 6,000,000 television screens had been on during the final strenuous murder

Canada Throws Curb At Multi-Lingual Stations; Gotta Prove Circulations

Ottawa, Jan. 30.

Great influx of immigrants to Canada over the past 15 years has cued Board of Broadcast Governors to set up "ground rules" for stations applying for BBG's okay to air shows in other than Canada's two official tongues, English and French.

Licenses can be only issued in three categories: English, French, bilingual; there is no provision for a multi-lingual license to broadcast. Under its new rules, the board can recommend an extra notation on one of those licenses permitting the broadcaster to devote from 25 to 40% air time, between 6 a.m. and midnight, to special programming aimed at ethnic groups.

Canadian AMers have been airing foreign-language shows for some years. Main purposes seem to have been public service for immigrants and possible new sources of revenue, via advertising.

Catch in new rule is that BBG will not consider okaying a foreign-language notation on a station's license unless the station can convince the board it has a potential of 150,000 to 200,000 dialers with a tongue other than English or French. BBG presumes Montreal and Toronto are the only such locations.

Film Houses Hurt By TV in Portugal

Lisbon, Jan. 30.

TV in Portugal is taking the public away from the cinemas, especially in the provinces, while in Lisbon it has made very little dent in other forms of showbiz. In provinces they used to have two film shows a week, generally on Saturday and Sunday. It is at these weekly performances that the diminishing public is noticeable.

While one can see a tv program in the local cafe for the price of a cup of coffee (six cents) the lowest admission price to the local cinema cannot be less than 15 cents. A law of 1958 forbids the sale of entrance tickets in cafes where there is a tv set for the clientele, also forbids the installation of a tv set in any open air cafe, where it can collect an audience of hundred people or more. According to journalist Jorge Pelayo, in the provinces cafe owners just increase slightly their prices and the public pays without protesting and all through the summer open air cafes install tv set without the local authorities forbidding it.

If it happens that on a Saturday or Sunday tv presents a popular program the local cinema remains almost empty. For this reason less and less films are presented in the provinces and no new cinemas are being built. In Lisbon attendance at cinemas and theatres is diminishing only in the case of very exceptional tv programs, like an international sport event in which Portugal is particularly interested. In general the Lisbon public takes a rather snobbish view of tv.

TV in Portugal is a private enterprise owned by a limited company of which the government holds 50% of the shares. The technical installations are for the most part provided by Phillips and in a small proportion by RCA. Portuguese technicians have gone abroad: to Italy, France and England to learn their job and practically all the personnel comes from the state-owned Radio Nacional.

Atlanta—Frank Gaither, general manager of WSB Radio has announced addition of four new workers to station's ranks. Phil Harrison, former editor of LaGrange (Ga.) Daily News, has joined station as director of public relations. Phyllis Grollman, former continuity acceptance editor at KADC, Los Angeles, has joined radio sales department as script writer. Sandra Alley, recent graduate of Univ. of Georgia, has been made radio music librarian. Kermit Hamby, formerly with WMIT, Mount Mitchell, N.C., now is a WSB radio engineer.

the SG picture. There are other factors that company experts feel will enlarge the profit margin in the next fiscal year.

SG is basically a three-way operation (with important sidebars like the recently added Cellomatic establishment). There is John Mitchell's previously discussed network sales operation, Bob Seidelman's syndie operation and Lloyd Burns' international setup. They all report to general manager Jerry Hyams, and, as proof of their importance, these are the four men in SG who also own substantial stock options, etc., in the new independent SG.

Burns' international group is said to be ahead of the game. First off, there is a small, but profit-making (say company sources) Canadian production operation. But that's not Burns' big concern at this time. His big concern is foreign sales, and in this department, he's said to be going great guns. Actual sales breakdowns are not available outside the company, but they reportedly show a neat profit and probable increases over the last fiscal year.

Theoretically, if there is any manner of financial 'disappointment' to SG, it'll be syndication, simply because that end of the tv business these past couple of seasons has shrunken all over in its earning potential. However, Seidelman's operation is blessed with 210 post-48 Columbia features, which are very important sales items in market-by-market sales; they're already reportedly sold in nearly 70 markets.

SG will probably add more coin via syndication soon by going ahead with another two years of replays on "Tightrope." Today it requires a hot sales potential before a syndicator is willing to contemplate paying heavy actor residual payments on third and fourth runs, because often the payment to thesps outweighs the sales returns.) This onetime network show hit 110 markets in its first two syndie runs, and SG says many stations already are seeking the additional runs.

It's true that the syndication biz is not what it once was, but SG sources maintain it made money for the company last year via "Tightrope" and other replays (SG owns a large catalog). "Shannon," a first-run syndie skein, is not yet a profit-maker, but the sales have been coming through sufficiently well so that SG experts are predicting it will actually show black ink on its own, probably by the end of the present fiscal year. "Shannon" is in 109 cities, five added this week. The Col features too are bound to help the present profit picture.

This is the SG money picture in broad terms. To add one more thing, SG has a large merchandising operation that has been making "gratifying" profits, largely out of merchandise based on the SG kidvid stanzas like "Dennis" and "Flintstones." That department is presently expanding.

to the persons directly involved in the proceedings . . . and that the general public be excluded."

In line with this, MCA attorney Allen R. Sussman, commenting on the order said: "I feel that it is premature to discuss the matter of an appeal because the findings and order remain to be settled. In that regard we have noted the recommendation by the court in its opinion that the testimony be given in closed session."

Obvious implication was that MCA would not object if Judge Yankwich's suggestion is complied with by the FCC. No indication as to the course the Government agency will take on this matter has been made yet by the Justice Dept. which is handling case.

In his announcement, Whalen stated complaint alleged that the object of the FCC investigation was to determine principally whether tv networks, commission licensees or others may be arbitrarily restricting or excluding the broadcast of otherwise meritorious programs or advertising material.

Mex TV's Yen For Local Dramatists

Mexico City, Jan. 30.

Emphasis in Mexican television this year will be placed on expansion of existing installations, and hypoing of programming, including more attention to live shows, especially presentation of plays by Mexican dramatists.

Emilio Azcarraga indicated that the long-deferred tv channel in Acapulco will become a reality this May. And another key deep south station in Mexico will be completed in Merida.

The Department of Communications is studying over 20 applications for new stations, and is expected to grant initial operational permits to a half dozen new stations within the early months of this year.

This apparently will be a good year for Mexican writers, playwrights, novelists, humorists, etc., since programming appears to be shifting to accent on constructive, well worked out Mexican themes, using services of professional capable writers.

In past Mexican writers have remained aloof from the tv medium in general, partly because of low pay and chiefly because they felt they were being "ignored" for material from abroad.

Phoenix, Tucson TVers Form Arizona Network

Phoenix, Jan. 30.

KOOL-TV, Phoenix, and KOLD-TV, Tucson, both CBS affils, have formed the Arizona Broadcasting Network, offering advertisers and agencies a single buy via ABN.

Arizona Broadcasting Network claims to cover the entire state of Arizona, plus parts of California and New Mexico, with tv homes equal to the number of homes served to the 14th market of the U.S.

Les Lindvig of KOOL-TV was named national sales manager of ABN. Other officers include Gene Autry, Tom Chauncey, E. S. Mittendorf and Homer Lane. ABN stations are represented nationally by George F. Hollingbery offices.

"Marshal Dillon," in the 7:30 slot next season. Filling out a possible half-hour that night is the planned expanded "Red Skelton Show" to a full hour, if a final okay can be secured from Skelton or else Benny.

Dick Van Dyke, shifted from a Tuesday slot to its present berth at 9:30 Wednesdays, seems to have won a rating reprieve for itself and looks toward a return next season. Out Wednesdays next season are "Alvin & Chipmunks," the cartoon show, and reruns of "Father Knows Best." "Checkmate" and the alternating "U.S. Steel Hour" and "Circle Theatre" are due to return.

"Father of the Bride" next season is out. Another Friday night entry, "Twilight Zone" will return next season, but may be shifted to another night. New Alfred Hitchcock hour entry probably will be scheduled Friday night.

Saturday night's program lineup next season is slated to remain as is.

TECHNOLOGY LAGS IN DISK BIZ

MGM Rounds Out Repertoire Via Deutsche Grammophon Classical Tie

MGM Records is stepping into the classical field via a tie with Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft. MGM will distribute the DGG and Archive Production labels in the U.S., Canada, Newfoundland and the Philippines.

The arrangements for the tie were set last week by Arnold Maxin, MGM president, who has just returned from Europe where he and Robert H. O'Brien, exec veepee of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, diskery's parent company, firmed the deal with DGG officials.

Distribution of the new DGG releases will be handled exclusively by MGM beginning April 1. The entire classical catalog will be handled exclusively by MGM beginning Jan. 1, 1963.

Leo H. Kepler, formerly director of the Angel division of Capitol Records, has been brought in to handle the distribution and promotion of the DGG labels under the supervision of Maxin. Kepler, who's been in the record business for the past 20 years, has been associated with Capitol as national merchandise manager of its classical department. He later was named director of the Angel division after Cap purchased Angel from its parent company EMI (Electric & Musical Industries).

The addition of the DGG lines now rounds out MGM's record repertoire so that the company will be represented in every field of recorded music. Acquisition of Verve Records a year ago strengthened the company with its roster of artists in the jazz and comedy fields.

Deutsche Grammophon, the largest diskery in Continental Europe, is the oldest record company in existence.

L. A. Tunester Members Of AFM Slice $600,000 Melon From '61 Jingles

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Over $600,000 was raked in by Los Angeles tunester members of the American Federation of Musicians in 1961 from tv and radio jingles and reruns of jingles, spots, kines, themes and videotapes. It's a record figure, and so is the $213,322 portion of it which came from residuals—300% over the previous year. The approximately $400,000 from new work was still another mark, about $100,000 over 1960.

Helping to raise the rerun total was a policing system on jingles residuals initiated last year by AFM prez Herman Kenin. This policy, conducted here under the supervision of international studio rep Phil Fischer, uncovered $51,096 in "new use" and reuse payments from Aug. 7, 1961 to Dec. 31. Of this sum, $12,917 had been paid direct to tunesters without AFM knowledge.

The policing drive disclosed tunesters earned $24,330 in reruns of tv jingles and spots and $13,848 in radio jingles. This is income the AFM wouldn't have known about without its drive.

In other 1961 collections, $33,640 came from reruns and new use of tv-radio jingles and spots; $128,586 from reuse of themes, kines and videotapes, for a total of $162,226. Overall, the rerun figure was $213,322.

Fischer said the majority of ad agencies were blameless, that they were not refusing to recognize rerun payments due AFM members. "In most instances the ad agencies are not signatories to our agreement and were not aware of the reuse payments due. However, on being advised of this by us, they have proved to be very cooperative in supplying information and seeing to it that new use and re-use payments are made," he said.

New use is when ad copy or the picture on a blurb may be changed at a later date, but the music retained. In such instances, the tunesters are paid again.

20th Preps Trackers From Parent Co.'s Pix

20th-Fox Records is prepping two soundtrack albums from upcoming pix on the parent 20th-Fox Pictures' slate. Both scores are by Manos Hadjidakis whose title tune from the pic "Never on Sunday" copped an Academy Award last year.

Hadjidakis has written the music for "It Happened In Athens" and "Lion of Sparta," both of which have been completed by the studio and are awaiting release. According to the diskery's prexy, Henry Onorati, singles of the title tunes from both pix will also be released.

Unique Deal Has Randazzo Tune On Two Labels

There seems to be no end to wheeling and dealing in the disk business. Things have reached a point now where one song, recorded by the same artist is on the market on two labels. Even the renditions are the same. But its not a case of piracy or anything like that — contractual arrangements allow for it.

The situation involves a waxing by Teddy Randazzo called "Mother Goose Twist." It can be found on both the Roulette and ABC-Paramount label. The reason for the duplication is that Randazzo made a pic in which he sings the tune.

Although Par (ABC-Par parent) produced the film, "Hey Let's Twist," the soundtrack LP deal was made with Roulette, mostly because of Morris Levy's involvement with the Peppermint Lounge, where the film was shot, and Joey Dee who gets top billing in the pic. Levy is Roulette's prexy.

Randazzo is under contract to ABC-Par, however, so in bargaining for the track package a deal was made whereby any songs he performed in the film could be released by ABC-Par as well as Roulette. There are no other contract conflicts in the soundtrack, Joey Dee being already signed to Roulette, Kay Armen not pacted with any label and Jo-Ann Campbell being accounted for.

TOWN HALL, N.Y., NABS LOTSA LEVENTHAL BIZ

Town Hall, one of New York's most active concert and recital houses, will be getintg a lion's share of business from Harold Leventhal in the next few months. As it stands now, the concert promoter has six dates lined up between February and May; five of them are in Town Hall. The sixth gig is slated for Carnegie Hall.

Leventhal's1962 season begins on Feb. 10 with Leon Bibb, followed by presentations of Odetta on March 3, the Clancy Bros. & Tommy Makem on March 24, Theodore Bikel on April 1 and Pete Seeger Children's Concert on April 28. All of these dates are at Town Hall. On May 18, Leventhal will present Joan Baez at Carnegie.

This slate represents a potential gross of around $35,000 for Leventhal and to Town Hall it means about $3,000 in rentals.

MARV BROWDY JOINS UA

Marvin Browdy, for the past two years sales manager of Trans-American Distributing Corp., has moved over to United Artists Records as eastern regional sales manager.

Browdy, who's been in the recording field for the past 12 years, will report to Jerry Baker, UA's national sales manager.

LIGHT DEPLORES RESEARCH LACK

A situation has developed in the record industry whereby technology has not kept pace with artistic achievement. So feels Enoch Light, executive director of Command Records, an ABC-Paramount Records division. "About 50% of the expensive work done in creating and producing better product is thrown away by manufacturing backwardness," he feels.

"It is a terrible situation," Light insists. "Recording is improving but pressing, plating and cutting processes are 10 years old," he points out. To eradicate this situation Light feels that the "industry must conduct greater research and develop greater technology," but he adds, "there is no cooperation in the industry."

"The most important thing is that the industry should have a strong organization with a board of directors to improve technical and other conditions," says Light. This should be an overall group with representation by equipment manufacturers and creators, disk manufacturers, distributors, dealers, a&r men and all those who play a part in the production, creation and marketing of records.

There are several problems which face the record industry, as Light sees it, and this type of organization would be in a position, through industry-wide cooperation, to possibly right some of these wrongs. The organization, if a united one, would resemble those of major manufacturers in the nation.

Urges Better Planning

The associations participated in by other manufacturers usually also have some power outside their own confines, and Light feels that the record industry could use such cohesive planning. By the unity of such a setup, Light believes that problems like counterfeiting and piracy could be more effectively fought and technical progress, which he contends is not justifying a&r progress," could also be brought into more proper perspective.

This organization could also serve to regulate, because it would include all facets of the industry. The stability of the distributor and the dealer would be improved by setting plans and policies through which diskeries could again return to a greater margin of profit. These aims would be accomplished by establishing some yardstick by which to operate as an industry instead of the many-headed creature the business now is, in Light's view.

The advent of stereo has increased the public's interest in disks immeasurably, Light feels. But this interest will not be continued unless the technical procedures in manufacturing disks improve with the artistic develop-

Mercury to Sell Phonograph Line

Mercury Records will have a phonograph line out soon. The introduction of the machines stems from the diskery's affiliation with Philips Records of Holland which will have its disks marketed by Mercury in the U.S. and wants to market some record players here as well.

The machines will be manufactured in Holland by Philips but called the Mercury Phonograph here. The first unit to be marketed will be a portable stereo outfit with two detachable speakers and an overall lightweight construction, similar in design to some domestic brands.

The introduction of the Merc phono line is the first time in years that a disk outfit not in the phono-graph business has put out its own record player line.

Jazz Rising Anew in '62 as Diskeries Build Lines to Grab the Hip Market

It's getting to look like 1962 will be a big year for jazz on wax. Several diskeries, large and small, have announced plans to bolster their jazz lines either by distribution deals or actual production plans. The latest entry into jazz buildup sweepstakes is the Mercury-Philips combine which recently signed several jazz artists to the respective labels as part of a concerted effort to grab a piece of the hip market.

So far Merc has tagged Roland Kirk, Buddy De Franco and Billy Taylor. The label already has the services of Quincy Jones. Philips, which is releasing product via Merc channels, has inked Woody Herman, Julius Watkins and Georgie Auld.

Recently RCA Victor proclaimed a jazz buildup. MGM Records took over distribution of Charlie Parker Records in addition to its Verve jazz imprint and such jazz indies as Riverside (and subsids), Prestige (and subsids) Atlantic and others have been working for strength in the jazz market.

Mercury at one time was an important label for jazz but let it slip "because the returns weren't large enough." Apparently it's figured that the returns are large enough now. Both Merc and Philips, which is anxious to get into the U.S. disk scene, are priming for a push.

Over the past year some of the majors saw rewards from jazz artists, even though this element of music has fallen largely within the province of the indies which have more time and need less returns to make a success of jazz product.

Mercury for a time had abandoned its Emarcy jazz imprint but re-established it last year as a special logo which it printed next to the Mercury name on its jazz platters and covers. In the current program it will continue to use the Emarcy name that way while the Philips jazz product will simply be on the Philips label along with all of its other disks.

The Philips jazz waxings with U.S. artists will be recorded in the U.S. at Merc studios but released on Philips. The Dutch label will also set for release here such jazz waxings as it now has in its Holland catalog, thereby making its position more affirmative.

Merc and Philips are currently conducting talent hunts to unearth new jazz artists, both Yank and European. There will be new jazz packages from both labels beginning with their February releases.

Name Chas. Richmond Reliable Label Prexy

Charles A. Richmond has been named president of the Reliable Record Corp., the recently formed specialty album firm headquartered in New York.

A schedule of releases has been set for a six-month period beginning in February, to be led off by Jeannie Thomas' "Jeannie Thomas Sings His 'N' Hers." Other categories to be handled by the label include moppet activities, self-improvement, folk, classical and pop.

British Diskeries' Sales Climbed To $5,185,600 in Nov.

London, Jan. 30.

Manufacturers grossed $5,185,600 from disk sales during November, says a Board of Trade statistical report, a rise of 9% over the previous November. Also on the upbeat were domestic sales which, at $4,552,800, were some 20% more than for the same period in 1960. Exports, however, slipped by 34% to $632,800. Over the 11-month period in 1961, home sales rose by 14% but exports dropped by the same percentage.

In November last year, a total of 2,712,000 albums were produced, repping a 36% hike over figure for preceding November. Output of the ended-play, four ext-track 45 rpm disks droped as did the production of 78 rpm platters. The former was down by 14% and the latter by 21%.

Total production over the 11 months, however, was up by 5%. This breaks down to a 15% increase in albums, a 5% increase in 45 rpm disks and a 41% dip in 78s.

ONYSKO NEW G.M. OF CINCY SUMMER OPERA

Cincinnati, Jan. 30.

John Onysko has taken over as general manager of the Cincinnati Summer Opera, succeeding Dion Yannopulos, who stepped up from artistic director in 1960 and withdrew for "personal reasons," according to John Margo, chairman of the opera board steering committee.

Onysko will continue as business manager and treasurer of American Ballet Theatre, N. Y., taking summer leaves for his Cincy duties. In assuming his new post last week, he directed the balloting of association members and Cincinnati and out-of-town patrons for choice of eight of 20 standard operas "to give them what they want to hear."

He said there will be no "new look" staging of operas, as in the past three seasons, and that old sets will be used to keep the 1962 season within budget. There will be a four-week season starting June 20 at the Cincy Zoo outdoor theatre with two operas a week. Prices remain the same as last year.

A new music director and artistic director are to be appointed soon by Onysko.

Conductor Piero Bellugi will be guest batonist with the symph Feb. 1-2.

Aged Musicians at Milan Rest Home Benefit From Verdi Copyright Extension

Copyrights on Giuseppe Verdi's music have been extended for another year by the Italian Parliament. The extension is cause for rejoicing among a hundred aged musicians in Milan, site of the Giuseppe Verdi Rest Home for Musicians.

The Home was founded as per a bequest in the composer's will and constructed after his death in 1910. He is buried on the grounds of the institution. The reason for the glee on the part of the resident musicians is that with each performance of a Verdi opera, 4% of the gross is contributed to the home. Proceeds from Italy's opera houses alone came to $36,285.80 in 1961.

According to Italian law, the Verdi copyrights were set to expire in 1951, 50 years after his death. The copyrights were then given a 10-year extension through last year. The new extension moves the expiration to the end of 1962.

The institution is supported by a $32,000 annual contribution from the Italian government, as well as from royalties from performances of Verdi's works abroad. The Milan publishing house of G. Ricordi, which publishes the composer's material, also collects a 4% royalty from each performance as the copyright holder.

Mathis 'Live It,' Kingston's 'Concert,' Washington's 'Tears' Top News LPs

JOHNNY MATHIS: "LIVE IT UP!" (Columbia). Johnny Mathis is in a peppy mood dishing out energetic vocal sounds that really bounce across the grooves. It's a natural for big sales takeoff and lots of spinning attention. Backed up by Nelson Riddle's orch, Mathis has solid musical support all the way and really turns up the steam with "Johnny One Note," "I Won't Dance," "Love" and the comparatively new "Hey Look Me Over," which is growing in standard stature.

THE KINGSTON TRIO: "COLLEGE CONCERT" (Capitol). Caught in the act at a concert at UCLA, this disk captures the spark of the ever-buoyant, ever-entertaining Kingston Trio. John Stewart, Nick Reynolds and Bob Shayne have the folk plot down pat and deliver with a style and a humor that keep 'em on top. Included are some of their newer items such as "Where Have All The Flowers Gone" and "O Ken Karanga" but such as "M.T.A.," "Laredo," and "Roddy McCorley" continue to hold up.

DINAH WASHINGTON: "TEARS AND LAUGHTER" (Mercury). A consistently fine performer, Dinah Washington is in top form in this packaging backed by Quincy Jones' rhythmic crew. The arrangements are fresh and tasty which helps Miss Washington add new flavoring to such oldies as "Jeepers Creepers," "Secret Love," "Wake The Town and Tell The People" and "Bewitched." The title song is of recent vintage but it has long-lasting qualities.

PAUL DESMOND: "DESMOND BLUE" (RCA Victor). A part-time lammister from the Dave Brubeck Quartet, Paul Desmond really shines in his first excursion for RCA Victor. His haunting sax is spotlighted against a moody string backing arranged by Bob Prince that help color "My Funny Valentine," "Body and Soul," "Like Someone In Love" and "I've Got You Under My Skin" with new hues. Jim Hall's guitar work adds to the smooth flow. The pop programmers will even go for this one.

DICKIE GOODMAN: "THE MANY HEADS OF DICKIE GOODMAN" (Rori). Dickie Goodman has an antic humor that comes over extremely well in disk form. He's already scored with some single shots like "The Flying Saucer" and "The Touchables" (included here) and his newer gag angles sprinkled with pop tune excerpts give the set a fine selling potential.

JOHNNIE RAY: (Liberty). Although he's a veteran in the emotional vocalizing school, Johnnie Ray is still a singer to be paid attention to. In this wrapup, he's taken a flock of oldies and brings 'em to life with his potent approach. "Till The Clouds Roll By," "I'll Be Seeing You," "Long Ago and Far Away" and "What A Diff'rence A Day Made" are some of the songs he tackles that the programmers will go for. He gets a nifty assist from the Lois Winter Singers and an orch conducted by Belford Hendricks who also arranged the material.

PAUL TAUBMAN ORCH: "BIG BRASS BAND" (Epic). There always seems to be an audience for the spirited martial beat and Paul Taubman has the right idea for this crowd. The package is a rouser that runs from Victor Herbert to "Colonel Bogey." It's a band concert that's aimed for family appreciation and it will probably get it.

SHIRLEY BASSEY: (United Artists). Thus far, Shirley Bassey has had more impact on the English market than in the U. S. but she has the pipes to pull her through. Unfortunately this packaging display fails to give her too much leeway in beat and tempo changes and taken together the album gets to be a bit monotonous. However, there are reprises of her hits, "Reach for the Stars" and "Climb Every Mountain," which should keep her fans happy.

GORDON JENKINS ORCH: "SOUL OF A PEOPLE" (Time). The peg for this package is on Jewish music. Gordon Jenkins, conductor and arranger, has collected a flock of Jewish-oriented pieces and put them all together to make an effective musical display that's not limited in appreciation to the audience it represents. "Hava Nagila," "Roumania, Roumania," "Hatikvah," "Bei Mir Bist Du Schoen" and "My Yiddishe Mama" are some of the items that come across strongly in Jenkins' musical patterns.

JOHN GIELGUD-KEITH MICHELL-LEO McKERN: "KING RICHARD II" (Caedmon). A stellar cast gives Shakespeare's "Richard II" strong audio values and adds another important set to Caedmon's Shakespeare Recording Society spoken word catalog. Richard is an intricate character to portray but Gielgud takes it in his stride and brings a true dimension to the many-faceted personality. The three-disk set was directed by Peter Wood and G. B. Harrison has done a good job editing the text which is included in the package.

WILL ROGERS: (Distinguished Recordings). The spoken word buffs will have a field day with this collectors' item. It's a definitive display of the legendary Will Rogers' humor and it holds up even though it was recorded close to 30 years ago. Topics such as "Mother's Day," "Inheritance Tax" and "The Congressional Record" will go on forever but will seldom be handled with more wit.

"HEY, LET'S TWIST" (Roulette). Here's a "Twist" bonanza. It's the soundtrack from Par's "Hey, Let's Twist" and features performances by Joey Dee & the Starliters, Kay Armen, Teddy Randazzo and Jo-Ann Campbell. Henry Glover composed the music with the beat which dominates this package but there's also an occasional respite like Randazzo's smooth balladeering on "It's a Pity to Say Goodnight" and an alto sax turn by Bill Rammel. For the frantic set there's also a wild number by Miss Campbell and the percussive stylings of Dee & Co. It adds up to a good showcasing for the respective talents of those concerned.

"MEYER DAVIS PLAYS THE TWIST" (Cameo). Since society and the adult market is in full swing with the Twist, it's only appropriate that the king of society band leaders cut a Twist package. And Meyer Davis has done just that. The set has a big band flavor, complete with voices, and propels the beat in solid fashion, sometimes subtly and at other times with the unabashed directness of an rock 'n' roll combo. The result is an LP for Twisters of all ages which is sometimes earthy and other times just swinging. Teeners may, however, be disturbed by the occasional switch in tempo like the Latino "Sway," and the more melodic things like "I Can't Give You Anything But Love."

"JAMES DARREN SINGS FOR ALL SIZES" (Colpix). On his way to pic longevity via Columbia, James Darren this year also came up with a disclick for Colpix in "Goodby Cruel World," which is one of the tunes included on this stylish teen-aimed showcasing by the singer. There is a nice assortment of tempos in this package and Darren handles all the material in smooth and professional style that indicates that he is ready for stronger material and exposure than the teen-directed content in this set. Included in the album are a couple of numbers that could take off on their own for singles air play and sales. The LP itself is a solid outing for Darren, particularly in the ballad department like the slick "How Sweet You Are," with sales potential.

ALDO BRUSCHI: "ALPS TO THE SEA" (Cima). At In Boboli, a club on New York's upper east-side, Aldo Bruschi has devised a successful formula of blending operatic vignettes and romantic Italian cabaret music. He concentrates on the latter here, and with the aid of a strong-voiced ensemble, brings forth a flavorsome repertoire. It's a perfect dish for the In Boboli clientele. Gros.

Top Singles Of The Week

(The 'Best Bets' of This Week's 100-Plus Releases)

JOHNNY MATHIS . . . . . SWEET THURSDAY
(Columbia) . . . . . One Look

Johnny Mathis' "Sweet Thursday" (Elm Drive) is a lilting ballad with a fine lyric which this singer projects for maximum results. "One Look" (Elm Drive*) is another pretty ballad also due for spins.*

TOMMY EDWARDS . . . THE TABLES ARE TURNING
(MGM) . . . . . I'll Cry You Out Of My Heart

Tommy Edwards' "The Tables Are Turning" (Cedarwood†) is a topnotch ballad with a rocking Latin beat handled very slickly by this performer. "I'll Cry You Out Of My Heart" (Aldon†) is a pleasing ballad with a simple format.

THE TOKENS . . . . . B'WA NINA
(RCA Victor) . . . . . Weeping River

THE DRIFTERS . . . . . MEXICAN DIVORCE
(Atlantic) . . . . . When My Little Girl Is Smiling

The Drifters' "Mexican Divorce" (Plan Two-Walden-Quartet†) is a catchy rhythm ballad with an offbeat idea delivered in top-flight style by this combo. "When My Little Girl Is Smiling" (Aldon†) is an okay rocking ballad with a more conventional idea.

(ABC-Paramount) . . . . . Serves Me Right

THE PLATTERS . . . . . IT'S MAGIC
(Mercury) . . . . . Reaching For A Star

The Platters' "It's Magic" (Witmark) brings back this oldie in a standout contemporary-styled version due for spins across the board. "Reaching For A Star" (B. F. Wood*) is another solid etching due for spins.*

THE ESCORTS . . . . . GLORIA
(Coral) . . . . . Seven Wonders Of The World

The Escorts' "Gloria" (Benell) is a swinging rocker belted by this combo in a style that sounds like a parody of The Marcels, but it's only the new type of vocalisthenics which the kids are going for. "Seven Wonders Of The World" (Maureen†) is a slow ballad with an okay lyric idea which is sold with commerc'l appeal.*

EDDY ARNOLD . . . . . TEARS BROKE OUT ON ME
(RCA Victor) . . . . . I'll Do As Much For You Someday

Eddy Arnold's "Tears Broke Out On Me" (Pamper†) is a bouncy number that adds up to one of the best sides this country singer has had in some time. "I'll Do As Much For You Someday" (Milane) is a sentimental ballad in a routine groove.*

IVORY JOE HUNTER . . . . . THE LIFE I LIVE
(Capitol) . . . . . Great Big Heart of Love

Ivory Joe Hunter's "The Life I Live" (Beechwood†) is a standout rhythm number that fits right into The Twist cycle. "Great Big Heart of Love" (Lucky Hit-Milharen†) is another strong side delivered by a firstrate blues performer.

JACK B. NIMBLE . . . . . NEVER ON SUNDAY
(Dot) . . . . . Nut Rocker

Jack B. Nimble's "Never On Sunday" (Skidmore†) is a cleverly managed Twist instrumental which will give this picture tune a new lease on life. "Nut Rocker" (Fowley†) is a fast-moving side hammered out on the piano.

THE CRENSHAWS . . . MOONLIGHT IN VERMONT
(Warner Bros.) . . . He's Got The Whole World In His Hands

The Crenshaws' "Moonlight In Vermont" (Goldsen) is a wild-sounding rocking slice which doesn't sound like anything like a song should, but it's slanted to the Coke set. "He's Got The Whole World In His Hands" (Granite†) brings back this religioso in an okay rocking arrangement.*

THE RONDELS . . . . . CALDONIA
(Amy) . . . . . 110 Pounds Of Drums

The Rondels' "Caldonia" (Cheeriot) is a frantic, allout instrumental with, natch, a Twist beat that keeps on driving all the way. "110 Pounds Of Drums" (Republic†) is another pounding instrumental with chances.

WYONNA CARR . . . . . SO LONG
(Reprise) . . . . . Down By The Riverside

Wynona Carr's "So Long" (Shapiro-Bernstein) is a good torch number delivered stylishly by a fine songstress. "Down By The Riverside" (Beaver*) is a fair adaptation of the old religioso.*

KENNY COLMAN-LANA SISTERS . . . . HEART DIVIDED
(ABC-Paramount) . . . . . Down South

Kenny Colman-The Lana Sisters' "A Heart Divided" (Dorsey Bros.) is an attractive ballad with a light beat and a pleasing vocal arrangement in a sing-along groove. "Down South" (Consolidated*) is a routine.*

GARY CROSBY . . . . . WHO
(Gregmark) . . . . . That's Alright Baby

Gary Crosby's "Who" (Aldon†) is a ballad delivered in fine blues style. "That's Alright Baby" (Gregmark-Text†) is familiar rocking stuff. Herm.

Pix Tunes Paying Off for Brit. Pubs Who Credit Better Writing for Upbeat

London, Jan. 30.

Following an upsurge of film music in 1961, publishers here are reporting that pix and their scores will be featured more strongly in their plans for 1962. Chappell's, which publishes the smash "Exodus" theme and "Moon River," another strong sheet-seller, is eagerly anticipating "Flower Drum Song" and "West Side Story" to which it has the music rights.

Similarly, Feldman Music, in the Francis Day & Hunter group, is expecting boff returns from numbers featured in feature films. Waxings have been arranged for songs out of such pictures as "A Change Of Heart," "The Roman Spring Of Mrs. Stone," "The Inspector" and "The Lonely Ones."

The Belinda group has several Elvis Presley pix to which it has grabbed the lion's share of numbers. Sheetmusic-wise, Presley is fickle property — one number will sell only 4,000 while another may climb over the 20,000 mark. Belinda also has 26 numbers out of "It's Trad, Dad," a film starring many hit songsters which may have several potential click songs.

At Filmusic, owned by the Rank Organization whose music it releases along with Anglo-Amalgamated's and other independent film companies', there are signs of optimism. Hyped by the success of Helen Shapiro's "Walkin' Back To Happiness"—the company's biggest hit to date—the feeling is Filmusic is now going to move into top gear after two years of "finding its feet." Major items will come from yet another pop music pic, "Play It Cool," which stars Billy Fury, Miss Shapiro and Danny Williams.

According to Cyril Baker, chief of the Belinda group in the U.K., the resurgence of film themes and songs is due mainly to improved standards of theme writing. Producers' selection of theme music has become more astute, he says. Film music now is often able to stand on its own as a commercial product, hence the popularity of themes from "Ben Hur," "King of Kings," "The Big Country" and "Exodus."

Telefunken's Tribute To Berlin's 'Golden '20s' A Praiseworthy 4 LP Pkg.

Berlin, Jan. 30.

Historical records are gaining more and more popularity among Germany's nostalgia-conscious music lovers. Berlin's "Golden Twenties" have been preserved by Telefunken in a special album entitled "Das gab's nur einmal" (That Only Happened Once) which consists of four LP's dedicated to opera, operetta, film songs and cabaret chansons. It's a praiseworthy production.

In all, there are 64 items on these four platters. Noteworthy about them is that nearly all originate from private sources. (The greater part of the old Telefunken archives didn't survive World War II). Technical deficiencies of several titles are secondary in view of the high artistical quality of interpretation and their historical value.

The names of the singers speak an eloquent language. Many have long passed away, others (the Jewish artists) became victims of the brutal Nazi regime and some have retired. The opera LP features the voices of such former greats as Kar-Schmitt-Walter, Michael Bohnen, Joseph Schmidt, Louis Graveure and Peter Anders, just to name a few.

The operetta disk includes such names as Rosita Serrano, Erna Sack, Eran Berger, Gustav Waldau, among others. The cabaret chanson LP is a particularly sentimental disk. Among those heard are Kurt Gerron and Paul Morgan, both of whom ended in Hitler's hell camps; Marlene Dietrich, with her famous "Johnny" song; Curt Bois, Hilde HHdebrand and the late Rotraut Richter.

This album brings back memories of a time which, showbiz-wise, was the happiest Berlin ever had.

Spanka Inks New Writers, Acquires Stuart Catalog

Spanka Music Corp., one of singer Paul Anka's publishing outfits, has signed writing pacts with Barry Richards and the brother-sister scribe team of Jean & Don Thomas. Richards, like Anka, records for RCA Victor while Jean Thomas is on the Cadence label as a singer.

Spanka has also acquired the Stuart Music catalog, with contains among its copyrights "Swing Low, Swing Clarinet," recently cut by Woody Herman Quartet on Philips.

Cadence's Candid A Fabulous Invalid

Lest there be any doubt that Candid Records is in operation, its parent label, Cadence Records, has moved a man from its production staff and named him general sales manager of the Candid jazz line. He's Peter Hess and he says that there will be two new Candid releases out in February, with another eight set for distribution within the next three months.

The first two releases since the company's personnel shakeup two months ago will be a package by Memphis Slim and an anthology LP called a "Treasury of Field Recordings." Produced by Mack McCormick, the latter set contains recordings collected in the fields, swamps and jails around Houston, Tex., taped between 1951-59.

Some 30 artists are included, and all but Lightning Hopkins (who was unknown at the time) are obscure local singers. An insert explaining the material and singers will be enclosed. The field trips were sponsored by the Texas folklore Society and the Houston Folkore Group. The Memphis Slim set was produced by Nat Hentoff, who produces all of Candid's regular jazz packages.

Candid has eight disks in the can, which Hess expects to be released in the next three months. Plans call for more waxings after this batch is released, probably produced by Hentoff if he's available. Hess is still working in Cadence's productcion department as well as handling the Candid line but expects to be devoting full time to Candid shortly.

There will be no additions to the Cadence staff when the switch is completed, according to Hess, who figures that existing personnel will be able to handle the Cadence production chores.

NARAS SETS ALBUM COVER EXHIBITIONS

The National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences has set up exhibitions in New York and Chicago of album covers nominated for the organization's 1961 Grammy Awards in the LP cover category. The showings will be held simultaneously in both cities and are being held in cooperation with Mead Papers Inc.

The New York display will be shown at the Library of New Ideas, Feb. 6-23, on Mondays through Fridays from 9 a.m.-5 p.m. The exhibition is open to the general public and there will be no admission charge. A special preview for the trade and press will be held Feb. 5 with Mead Papers hosting the event.

The exhibitions have been established with two ideas in mind. One is to demonstrate to the general public the quality work being done in disk packaging and the other is to give voting members of NARAS an opportunity to view the Grammy Award nominees.

Densue Music has been set up by Joe Lubin, proxy of Denny Records, as a publishing comonly for the Hollywood label's tunes.

Dangerous Trend?

For those who like to worry about trends in the lyrics of pop singles, there are now four big-selling tunes whose subject deals with marital infidelity or rendezvous between partners of different marriages.

The numbers are "Walk On By" by Leroy Van Dyke on Mercury, "Go On Home" by Patti Page, also on Merc; "Smoky Places" by the Corsaires on Tuff and "Mexican Divorce" by the Drifters on Atlantic.

Wally Schuster Joins Pub Firms of Morris Levy As Kahl Makes Diamond Tie

Wally Schuster has been named general professional manager of Planetary, Patricia and Frost Music, Morris Levy's publishing firms. His appointment follows the exit from the pubs last week of Phil Kahl who had been partnered with Levy in their operation. Schuster has no such partnership arrangement, however.

Active in the music business for the past 21 years, Schuster had previously been associated with Levy in his publishing activities from 1957 to 1959. He then went with George Paxton's publishing interests and was with that operation until a few weeks ago. In his new post with Planetary, Patricia and Frost, Shuster will hunt new material and do extensive promotional work for Levy, who is also the president of Roulette Records.

Phil Kahl, who last week ended an eight-year tie with Morris Levy, has joined his brother Joe Kolsky in the operation of Diamond Records. Kolsky formed Diamond several months ago after leaving his post as veepee in charge of sales at Roulette Records which is owned by Levy.

As an adjunct to the disk operation, Kahl is setting up two new music firms, Tobi-Ann (BMI) Richard Irwin (ASCAP). (The firms are named for Kolsky's daughter and son.) In addition to picking pop material for the firms, Kahl expects to move into the pic and tv soundtrack areas. He'll make periodic visits to the Coast for these acquisitions.

Kahl, who'll also work in artists & repertoire, expects to hire freelance a&r men on assignment. Among those lined up are Paul Vance, Billy Mure, Bob Crew and Sid Bass.

Riverside Readies LP Re-enacting Civil War

Having previously released a documentary on World War II, Riverside Records has dipped into history again and is now readying a package on the Civil War.

Unlike the World War II set, which was a two disk deal and contained actual voices and events of the conflict, the new set will be a one LP package called "Sounds of the Civil War." Produced by Barrett Clark, Riverside's special projects producer, the album was recorded at West Point where a group of Civil War buffs, not West Point personnel or cadets, go every now and then to re-enact various battles of the War Between the States in realistic fashion.

As recorded, these war games include sounds of fire arms, bugle calls, rebel yells, fife and drum performances, marching songs and other elements typical to the action, all performed as simulations of actual battles. Accompanying the disk will be special descriptive text by Clark and several full-color pictures of battles.

Cap Ups Kenyon to Mgt. Services Administrator

Grant Kenyon, formerly personnel director for Capitol Records, has been upped to the newly created position of management services administrator for the company's electronics and mail order activities. He'll report to v.p. Daniel C. Bonbright.

In his new spot, Kenyon will supervise numerous corporate activities — including business and profit planning, legal services and personnel administration. He had been Cap's personnel director since January, 1960.

Epic May Be Col Subsid But Under Len Levy It's Getting an Indie Flavor

Although Epic Records is a subsidiary of one of the key majors, Columbia Records, it's taking on the guise of an indie. The reshaping of Epic along indie diskery patterns is being handled by Len Levy, record company's national sales manager.

According to Levy, an indie operation has an advantage over a major in that it can move faster and "swing" more effectively in promotion and distribution areas. "For instance," he explains, "if the out-of-town distributor has faith in you and your line he will supply tips on local disk breakouts which indies need to keep pace with the fast-changing business."

Also, adds Levy, an indie has to have maneuverability and malleability to keep up with the competition. Another factor in giving the indie an advantage over the major company operation is the distributor. In addition to supplying tips, the indie distributor is an important bellwether constantly cueing the homeoffice on what's needed and what should be followed up.

Even though Epic is now operating like an indie, Levy admits that it is still a large sized company on its own and he has had to enlist the aid of the parent company's field men to push the Epic line on the road. "However," he points out, "they wear 'two hats' because the Epic and Columbia product take different selling and promoting techniques."

On the artists & repertoire end, Levy also has the support of Col's producing staff. It's especially effective in the rhythm & blues and gospel field. "Columbia has difficulty in merchandising in these areas," he says, "so Epic has taken over and we've even gone so far as to reactivate the Okeh label for an added drive on r&b and gospel."

Levy also points out that Epic isn't concentrating on the pop field alone. It stepped into the soundtrack sweepstakes only a few weeks ago with "Les Liaisons Dangereuses," bolstered its jazz output with Dave Grusin's "Subways Are For Sleeping" and has Tubby Hayes, English tenor saxist, upcoming. The diskery is also building strongly in the classical field with I Musici, The Cleveland Symphony and pianist Leon Fleisher.

In the pop album area, Epic has been racking up strong sellers with Roy Hamilton, Lester Lanin and Buddy Greco and at the same time building such new names as Tony Orlando and Erma Franklin.

Slate Jazz & Folk Gigs For Lincoln Center, N.Y.

A series of jazz and folk concerts will be part of the 1962-63 inaugural season in the new philharmonic Hall of Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts. Producers for the progams will be Monte Kay, international jazz promoter, and Donald Soviero, director of the Berkshire Music Barn, Lenox, Mass.

A subscription series of eight concerts will be presented the first Sunday of each month starting Nov. 4. Also planned are an additional nine concerts during the season which will be available to audiences on a single ticket basis beginning Oct. 12. Each session will present world premieres of original compositions which are being commissioned by Kay and Soviero.

In addition to the Lincoln Center series, Kay will present a jazz series at New York's Kaufman Concert Hall beginning Feb. 24. The series will be tagged "Jazz Theatre." On the first show will be the John Coltrane Quintet, singer Betty Carter, and Clara War & The Ward Singers.

The second concert, scheduled for March 17, will feature Herbie Mann & His Afro-Jazz Sextet and the Bill Evans Trio.

Elektra Expanding Into Films & TV

Jac Holzman, president of Elektra Records, is making preparations for a big move on the part of the indie diskery. Plans call for shifting the outfit's head office to the Coast and expansion into pix and tv. Holzman is already involved in the personal management field via his representation of singer-actor Theodore Bikel and also has a custom sound effects production company.

The actual physical move is slated for this summer. Elektra's executive and creative headquarters will be moved to Los Angeles at that time, with the New York office remaining open to handle sales, traffic and manufacturing. Recording will be done on both shores, and there will also be a sales office on the Coast.

The Coast is "a fantastic growth sales area for specialty recorded material," Holzman feels. Some 14-15% of the nation's sales in this type of material (folk, comedy, effects, spoken word, and the like) are registered there, he points out, 9% in the L.A. area alone.

For the time being, Holzman plans to retain his present offices in New York in addition to the new ones on the Coast. It is a possibility that he may eventually move the entire operation westward, but that remains to be seen.

As far as the pix and tv production arrangements are concerned, Holzman says that the operation is already being formulated and concerns a deal, as yet unannouncable, with a talent and production pool presently running in Los Angeles. If will involve handling of talent as well as the mounting of teleseries and feature films.

FRANK MUSIC ON FOLK KICK, BUYS FIDEREE

Frank Music has been bitten by the folk bug. The publishing outfit has acquired the Fideree Music Corp., a firm which holds over 150 copyrights on Josef and Miranda Marais' songs as well as other material which now gives Frank an international folk catalog.

The Marais have been performers, creators and arrangers of worldwide music for sometime. Many of their songs have been recorded, their material ranging from Christmas tunes to the score of the Broadway show, "Too Late the Phalarope."

Among the duo's best-known songs is "A-Round the Corner," a hit of several years ago by Jo Stafford. Their "Oh Brandy, Leave Me Alone" will be done by John Wayne in Par's upcoming, "Hatari."

GI Jazz Unit Breaks Into Top W. German Club For 1st Time, Scores Solidly

Frankfurt, Jan. 30.

Some talented GIs in Europe have formed an outstanding jazz group which has managed to break into a top club here. Airman first class David Feathers, trumpeter; Airmen second class James Johnson on piano, drummer Pvt. James McCullough and bassist PFC. Samuel W. Scott now have regular weekend bookings—when they are off duty—at Frankfurt's ace jazz cellar, the Domicile du Jazz.

The airmen are stationed at nearby Rhine Main Air Base, McCullough comes from the Third Armored Division's 143rd Signal Battalion, and Scott is with the 317th Engineer Battalion stationed in Frankfurt.

This is the first time that an American military group has been able to get bookings in a professional jazz nightclub. Most such amateur GI bands confine themselves to working at the officers', non-commissioned and enlisted men's clubs on the bases. But the Feathers quartet is working on the economy, catering to a largely German audience, and becoming a success with the locals.

Elect 2 to NARAS Board

Gerry Mulligan and Joe Benjamin have been elected to the board of governors of the New York chapter of the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences.

The tooters were recently voted onto the board to fill vacancies in the musicians' and member-at-large categories, respectively.

Pitt Symphony Won't Wax New Shostakovich Work That's Dedicated to Lenin

Pittsburgh, Jan. 30.

The board of directors of the Pittsburgh Symphony has decided against recording the 12th Symphony of Dimitri Shostakovich which is dedicated to Nicolai Lenin. Command Records, which records the orchestra, asked the board to wax the piece and also play the American premiere of the symphony.

Some board members wanted conductor William Steinberg to make the decision strictly on the symphony's merit as good classical music, but they were in the minority. The majority insisted that there were political and propaganda overtones of such magnitude that the Pittsburgh orchestra should not record the newest Shostakovich symphony and should not be the first to play it publicly in the United States.

The vote of the board is usually final, though the decision will be reviewed at the next meeting. The piece has already been played here as part of a violin concert at the Syria Mosque by Yehudin Menuhin. It has never been played here by a full orchestra and has not been recorded in the U. S.

Harold Leventhal Setting Up London Pub Branch

Harold Leventhal, concert promoter and music publisher, is expanding his publishing activities to Europe. On a recent trip to London, he set a deal there for the establishment of an English arm to his Fall River Music here.

The London arrangements were made with David Platz, who also operates Howard Richmond's London wing, Essex Music. Leventhal hasn't set a name for his new firm as yet but says it will function like Fall River in that it will be devoted to the gathering and marketing of folk material.

Benny's Fiddling Again

Hartford, Jan. 30.

Jack Benny again fiddles for art music in a concert with Hart Symphony here to raise funds for U. of Hartford new music and art center.

Admission to the concert will be limited to those contributors who either collect or give total of $500. Each receive two tickets. Date is Feb. 26.

Technology

ments. "Stereo has brought records back to public interest but the manufacturers aren't keeping pace, so much of this momentum is being lost," says Light.

"The public is 100% quality conscious," he asserts, and stereo is headed for a bigger year than last. Home reproduction equipment has greatly improved both in price availability and sound reproduction, he notes, but professional production equipment "has a long way to go" in his estimation.

Other Problems

In discussing the process with which he has had so much success in 1961, the use of magnetic film instead of tape, Light admits that for all the advantages he feels that film holds he still has to cut it on the same old tape machinery. This, he complains, reduces considerably the potential effectiveness which he believes the film process has.

The development of new creative processes must be paced by equivalent stages in technical growth, Light argues, or the former work goes almost entirely down the drain. He feels that the film strength shows improvement, but could be much more effective if cutting and plating equipment were prepared to handle its greater scope and depth.

The crux of much of the record industry's problems is its refusal to get together and cooperate, Light avers. The public is now in a record-conscious frame of mind, he believes and "it must be kept" that way. To do this, technology and other problems such as counterfeiting must be worked on by the industry as a whole and not by individuals laboring in scattered directions, he stresses.

Oases In TV Tune Wasteland

webs through the writing of theme songs, commercials and other kinds of filler music and sometimes lyrics for the medium.

On CBS there are 85 different identifying melodies which open and/or close some 70 shows. Some 85 composers and/or lyricists are involved in this output as well as the efforts of some 45 music publishers. That doesn't include commercials, the preparation of which employs many other composers and/or lyricists, publishers et al.

NBC has around 70 different themes for its shows which involve some 70 individual composers. The web uses the services of around 15 lyricists in this output. On ABC there are over 50 shows which have thematic material, which involves the work of numerous composers and authors. Although there is some duplication among the webs, the number of writers working on vidseries and jingles most likely exceeds the 200 mark by a good margin—an impressive pool of working musical talent.

Every show on the air, from quiz to news, has a theme of one type or another. The creative talents on these tunes are as diverse as the melodies, ranging from Vienna to Tin Pan Alley. But the fact remains that tv has become a source of employment for those serious enough not to want to live on rock 'n' roll and not serious enough to try to live that next symphony alone.

Most tv composers and lyricists are not just writers of main titles for oaters or whatever. But publishing houses have been formed within the past year or so whose principal function is to turn out fresh music and lyrics for commercials and vidseries. This is mostly true of the commercials area, however, the thematic tv chores being done more on a freelance basis.

Big Talent Demand

Whatever their involvement, however, many writers are making a nice piece of change out of the myriad of shows which come and go each year on the webs. It seems that, without a theme of its own, no vidseries feels complete, no matter what its content. As a result of the demand, a wide variety of talents is used to try and create come distinction for each show and to keep the music in tune with the program's content. Consequently, the networks' composer lists look like a who's who of music, ranging from the classical handles of Beethoven and Aaron Copland to the pop standards of Irving Berlin. On CBS the roster includes such names as the above and Lionel Newman, Ross Bagdasrian, Paul Taubman, Sonny Burke, Pete Rugolo, Les Baxter, Alfred Newman, Livingston & Evans, Dimitri Tiomkin, Ned Washington, David Rose, Nelson Riddle, Richard Strauss, Johnny Williams and others. ABC and NBC have impressive tunesmith slates as well in the who's who tradition.

In the area of commercials, things are a little more secretive in that there are several well-known composers and lyricists working behind closed doors turning out the stuff that finds new beauty in toothpaste and tobacco. Some of these commercials were even recorded last year via LPs by society bandleader Lester Lanin and jazzman-arranger Sasha Burland. In Lanin's case, his disk contained dance arrangements in various rhythms of medleys of radio and tv commercials. Burland's was a platter of jazz medleys of the messages.

What with the crop of new shows that turn up each season on the webs, there is a constant market for tunesmiths to ply their trade in this area. Commercials get wilder all the time, and there is plenty of coin and work for writers, both of music and lyrics. As both areas widen, as they seem to be, with more diversity of programming, the need for writers continues.

Major Distribution For Kruger's Ember Label Cheers Other Brit. Indies

London, Jan. 30.

An innovation in British disk marketing has been brought about by Ember Records chief Jeff Kruger. Following deals in the U.S. under which he obtained U.K. rights to many jazz albums, the disk exec and club owner has secured a wide release for his albums through distributors which previously have handled only major product.

Ember label will now be distributed by three large wholesalers which, to date, have put out only Decca product. Move marks a softening in distributor policy towards the independent labels for, until now, they have almost invariably bowed to the majors' will of not "wasting time" on small imprints which do only minor biz while major labels need pushing.

Disk distribution business, which is largely owned or under control of Decca and Electric & Musical Industries (EMI), has only eased at the Decca end, however, with EMI distribs still asserting they cannot handle any further labels.

Kruger's deal, which will encourage other small independents who have hoped for wider release through big distributor channels, will see the Ember label, confined to jazz and jazz-singing, put out more than 30 U.S. originated albums within the next few months.

British Retailers to Fight Record Club's Price Cuts

London, Jan. 30.

In view of the upsurge of postal record clubs, bane of the disk retailers' life, Associated Recordings Ltd. is preparing a plan whereby retailers can hit back at the price cutting of the clubs.

Idea is to let a record club revolve around the dealer, says AR, which is currently appointing retailers throughout the country as AR club agents. Advantage of the scheme is that it gives the retailer a chance to compete with low priced album trade while at the same time it necessitates customers entering disk stores.

AR is to spend more than $250,000 in plugs for the scheme involving daily and Sunday press. It starts Feb. 18.

Marks Pacts Dello Joio

Norman Dello Joio, American composer with many awards including a Pulitzer Prize, has signed an exclusive publication pact with Edward B. Marks Music. At present Prof. of Composition at the Mannes College of Music, he has composed in many classical forms and has written scores for tv, concerts, dance, opera as well as choral, chamber and other music.

In 1957, Dello Joio was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for music. He will make an address in March on "Contemporary Music In Education" at the biennial convention of the Music Educators National Conference in Chicago.

Gospel Artists, Once Leery of Agents, Now Converted to Mgt. Fold

Gary Kramer, who exited his post at Atlantic Records recently to form his own talent management firm, Jubilee Artsists Corp., has been building a hefty roster of gospel artists. He has also been at work on production plans for his artists, the first project of which is set for Feb. 18 at Carnegie Hall.

The Jubilee slate now contains the Staple Singers, the Caravans, the Soul Stirrers, the Highway Q C's, Prof. Alex Bradford, Marion Williams & the Stars of Faith, the Harmonizing Four, the Patterson Singers, Princess Stewart and, on a limited basis, rock 'n' roll exponent now turned gospel singer, Little Richard.

The development of Jubilee as a gospel management firm is a further indication of the growth of gospel music and performance on the U.S. entertainment scene. Although gospel performers have been active for several decades on a professional basis, they have largely resisted any form of personal management or booking agency setup such as exists in all other areas of the music biz.

With the growth of this musical form via disk, nitery, tv etc., the attitudes of many performers have begun to change with regard to management and booking agencies and more and more religioso artists are swinging toward personal management for their career guidance.

Kramer's Carnegie Hall stint will be an all-gospel concert for the benefit of the Musicians Aid Society of New York. The package had previously been presented at the Indiana Jazz Festival and the Museum of Modern Art, N.Y., last year.

Aragon Folds on Coast, Martin Back to Grove

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

The Aragon, ballroom on the beach at Pacific Ocean Park, closed a 42-year run as a terpalace Saturday night (27) when the Freddy Martin band wound up its stand. POP, the present owner, has no plans for structure.

Ballroom was built by brewer Charles J. Lick in 1920 and for years it was a mecca for name bands (as many as four played simultaneously during allnight "swing shift" operations during World War II). Before that it featured marathon dancing, in that era of the 1920s, and for a time, too, was a dime-a-dance spot.

Lawrence Welk concluded an 11-year solid run last May and Martin went in, at first five nights weekly, lately playing only Saturdays at flat $1,500 for the evening. Meantime, Martin is near closing a deal to return to the Cocoanut Grove when the Milton Berle show opens there March 6.

Mills, Dukes of Dixieland Ink Arrangement Deal

Mills Music and the Dukes of Dixieland have gotten together under a longterm pact to make the group's arrangements available to professional and school orchestra groups. The deal only involves the Dukes' recording arrangements.

Already released is "Farewell Blues," which the Army Services has purchased for distribution to each of its more than 600 active service dance bands. Soon to be published are "I Can't Give You Anything But Love" and "Ain't Misbehavin'" from the group's current Columbia Records LP. Eight additional orchestrations are in the works.

Grand Ole Opry Plans Hollywood Bowl Show

Having already cracked New York's Carnegie Hall, Grand Old Opry is planning a presentation for the Hollywood Bowl to be held next July or September.

The Country Music Assn., which is arranging the Bowl date, has appointed a committee consisting of Ken Nelson, Grant Turner, Bob Cooper and Steve Sholes to finalize the plans.

The CMA, at a meeting of officers and directors in Las Vegas Jan. 17-18, also agreed to participate in the International Sound Fair at Detroit next July. The CMA will produce an all-country & western show at the Fair using both American and Canadian talent.

The next meeting of CMA officers and directors will be held in Nashville May 4-5.

More Freedom for Prods. Results In Better Disks, Sez Brit. Decca Exec

London, Jan. 30.

Main conclusion reached by Dick Rowe from his recent visit to the U.S. was that record producers must be relieved of administration worries. The Decca a&r topper who is now mother hen to all company's pop single releases says he, himself, is going to keep away from disk production as much as possible to handle the million-and-one headaches that crop up between the creative people and the business execs.

Plan is to give his three aides full freedom to produce what style of disk they want (within the bounds of sanity, however) while he grows the ulcers. "I believe disks can no longer be turned out like sausages. Each one needs personal production! And administrative worries can easily take the edge off a producer," says Rowe.

Also out is the weekly conference, the fourth-floor confab to decide what artists should wax and with what style of backing. Decca's pop a&r men will now be lone wolves (unless they choose otherwise) and will produce platters from the idea to finished product with no queries from the upper echelons.

Says Rowe: "We have come to the stage now where we will not ask a producer to make a record he doesn't personally like much as we wouldn't ask a singer to record a number he didn't care for."

The unprecedented freedom Decca is giving its pop song producers is unlikely to be followed by competitor EMI (Electric and Musical Industries) which has a weekly selection committee — comprising a&r man, sales exec, publicity chief, administration staffer and others — which decides jointly on what should be made.

Academy's Music Branch Members Cutting Entries For Final Nominations

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Members of the Music Branch will whittle a total of 27 entries for the three music categories in upcoming Oscar sweepstakes down to five nominations each, on which the entire membership of Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences will vote for final wins.

Preliminary ballots sent to branch members and returned Jan. 8 disclosed that 10 songs had been selected by special nomination committee, 10 entries for Best Music Score of a Dramatic or Comedy Picture, and seven for Best Scoring of a Musical Picture.

Of the 27 titles, Dimitri Tiomkin came up with four compositions, and Miklos Rozsa and Henry Mancini three each.

In Best Song bracket, following were selected, the majority title songs from pix: "Town Without Pity," Tiomkin; "Parent Trap," Richard M. and Robert B. Sherman; "Cry for Happy," George Duning, Stanley Styne; "Moon River," from "Breakfast at Tiffany's," Mancini, Johnny Mercer; "Bachelor in Paradise," Mancini, Mack David; "Pocketful of Miracles," James Van Heusen, Sammy Cahn; "Love Theme" from "El Cid," Rozsa; Paul Francis Webster; "All Hands on Deck," Ray Evans, Jay Livingston; and two songs from "Guns of Navarone," the title song, by Tiomkin and Paul Francis Webster, and "Treusein," Tiomkin, Alfred Perry.

Best Music Score of a Dramatic or Comedy Picture: "Summer and Smoke," Elmer Bernstein; "One Eyed Jacks," Hugo Friedhofer; "Parent Trap," Paul Smith; "Breakfast at Tiffany's," Mancini; "King of Kings," Rozsa; "El Cid," Rozsa; "One, Two, Three," Andre Previn; "Fanny," Harry Sulkman; "Guns of Navarone," Tiomkin; "Ballad of a Soldier," Michael Siv.

Seeger Appeal Due in March

Another chapter in the six-year conflict between folk singer Pete Seeger and Congress will unfold in New York before the U.S. Court of Apeals in March. At that time his sentencing last April for contempt of Congress will be appealed.

The case, which has caused Seeger some difficulties but not damaged his career appreciably, began in 1955 when he was called to testify before the House Un-American Activities Committee. His refusal to answer some questions at that time caused him to be held in contempt of Congress. He was convicted last April and sentenced to a year in jail. He is presently out on $2,000 bail, pending appeal.

Seeger is represented by Paul L. Ross, a former assistant to William O'Dwyer when the latter was mayor of New York City. It is understood that if the appeal fails, Ross will take the case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

MGM's New Controller

Abraham Willinger has taken over as controller for MGM, Verve and Cub Records. He was upped to controller of the record division from the tax department of Loew's International Corp.

Associated with Loew's Theatres and MGM Pictures for 26 years, Willinger will now report to Thomas White, diskery's director of administration.

New Titles at Toronto For Homburger, Elton As Symph Faces Loss

Because of dropping this season of the "Pops" series by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. web—with no sponsors interested and a Massey Hall attendance falloff—Walter Homburger has been appointed new managing director of the Toronto Symphony. John Elton, former manager of the 98-men tooters, has been named associate managing director. He's been connected with the symphony for more than 30 years; was manager since 1936.

Trevor Moore, prexy of the symphony, stressed that Elton was not being forced out or demoted, that he continues in charge of all administrative work, with Homburger in on planning and job being "too big for one man." Homburger has managed International Artists Concert series for 15 years, his chief chore being Glenn Gould, Canadian pianist.

Mercury Taps Bob Kryl As So. Regional Manager

Chicago, Jan. 30.

Mercury Records has named Bob Kryl as the label's southern regional manager, Robert Giglio as Cincinnati-Columbus-Dayton promotion manager, and Jack Fay as Philadelphia promotion manager.

Giglio will work out of the Supreme Distributing Co., Cincinnati, and Fay will headquarter at the Raymond Rosen Co., Philadelphia. Kryl was formerly Mercury's promotion manager for the Atlanta territory.

Inside Stuff—Music

The Paul Winter Sextet has been scheduled for a 20-week Latin-American tour beginning Feb. 6 under President Kennedy's Special International Program for Cultural Presentations. The Sextet, which was organized on the Northwestern U. campus in 1958, will present modern jazz and conduct seminars in universities, conservatories and jazz clubs in 17 Central and South American countries through July 10. The tour is sponsored by the State Department and administered by the American National Theatre & Academy. In addition to Winter, the sextet is composed of Dick Whitsell (trumpet), Les Rout (baritone sax), Warren Bernhardt (piano), Richard Evans (bass) and Harold Jones (drums).

A Virginia radio station, WAVY, which covers the Norfolk, Portsmouth and Newport News area, has devised a campaign of its own to assist the 1962 March of Dimes. Listeners are asked to send in a dime for a song they want to hear. For every donation, the station's deejays fulfill the donor's request and mention his or her name. In addition, a special coin shoot has been rigged and, with appropriate sound effects, the coins are dumped into a giant cash box before each number is aired.

The promotion is being programmed as a regular feature on all seven segments hosted by WAVY deejays. The station operates on a 24-hour schedule.

Paul Taubman's new Epic album, "Big Brass Band," got a plug in the Congressional Record via a speech by Victor L. Anfuso (D-N.Y.). The Congressman said, "A noted American musician, Paul Taubman, who is a composer, pianist and conductor, has recently made an attempt to revive the old-fashioned brass band. He assembled a group of first class wind players and percussionists in New York, now known as Paul Taubman's Big Brass Band, and an album of some of America's most famous marches has just been released."

Jerry Newman, who formerly ran Esoteric Records and is now operating Stereo Sound Studios in New York, has uncovered a flock of acetates which he cut with the late Art Tatum more than 20 years ago. The acetates were made during impromptu sessions at such Harlem spots as Minton's Playhouse, Monroe's Uptown House, and two previously unreported after-hours spots, Rubin's Basement and the Gee-Haw Stables. Newman is now transferring the acetates to tape. No LP release deal has yet been set.

An electronic music-making instrument that looks like an organ but creates sounds that are anything but organ-like has made its debut in Don the Beachcomber's Mandalay Room, Honolulu. Chamberlain Music Master utilizes tape, a tape under each key, 70 in all. Each tape provides a distinctive effect or basic rhythm. Effects include an orchestra of violins, a "big band" sound, strains of a choir, thunder effects, laughter, even the barking of dogs. The model is one of the first to be played in public.

The symposium on the Arts and Sciences of the Recording Industry, being sponsored by New York U. and the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences, had its first session last Wednesday (24). The series has 110 subscribers, most of whom are involved in the disk industry. Last Wednesday's meet was the first of eight weekly, Wednesday evening conclaves and was moderated by Billy Taylor with talks by Clyde Otis, George Avakian, John Hammond and Nesuhi Ertegun.

Pop Disks Winning Broader Market in Britain, Decca Sales Chief Avers

London, Jan. 30.

The pop disk market in Britain is changing. While youngsters still represent the lion's share of single sales, the unrivalled domination of teenage taste has now got some competition from Mum and Dad. This view is held by S. A. Beecher-Stevens, Decca Records sales chief, who believes the phonograph is now as big a part of 1962 living as tv in the average U. K. home.

What started out as a luxury, strictly teenage appeal item has now been accepted by the whole family, he says. The exec sees this as main cause of the big boom in albums witnessed in 1961 as well as the infiltration of ballads, etc., into pop hit parades.

What this means for the future is some prize business for the disking industry, Beecher-Stevens estimates, for while a new and promising field has been opened up, it has been done without detriment to the kids' record-buying habit. "Presley will still sell 500,000 records here," he says, "but albums like 'The Black & White Minstrel Show' are up among the top bestsellers, albums which are certainly not bought purely by teenagers."

Further change in disking trends as foreseen by Beecher-Stevens is the development of stereo sound. "It will be to records what Cinemascope is to films," he believes. But like most new ideas, the introduction of stereo platters to the U.K. is having a not-so-easy time getting off the ground.

Nevertheless, Decca will bring out a new "phase" of stereo disks next month. These will feature big bands and orchestras rather than the "sound effects" of previous releases and introduce a more clearcut form of stereophony.

Elektra's Sound Effects

Elektra Records has set up a subsidiary called Authentic Sound Effects Inc. The new company produces sound effects tapes for its parent and on a custom basis for professional and non-commercial users.

Authentic Sound is gathering a variety of sound effects, the tapes of which are put on wax by the diskery which is compiling a platter library of effects for retail sales. Accompanying each disk is a "sound selector" which enables the listener to pinpoint the particular effect sought without hunting through the many cuts on the disks.

English Chappell Digs Jazz, Folk

London, Jan. 30.

Chapell, in the shape of Eddie Rogers, is maneuvering to cash in on an abundance of non-copyright material being revived here by two separate fads—Traditional (Dixieland) jazz and folk music. Rogers has formed Michele Music for the Chappell stable and is about to tie up legal strings on another newie, Minstrel Music.

Former company is to deal exclusively with jazz numbers while the second will build a catalog of folk music only. Reasons Rogers: "No one is benefiting from all the 'non-cop' music now being played—but the copyright act states that if a new arrangement is made of a non-copyright number, and that number is published, it will be considered a new work." Therefore, says Robers, Tradband leaders-arrangers such as Kenny Ball can soak up some nice composers' gravy by having their arrangements published.

Further reason for formation of the new pubberies is to establish specific "centres" for the styles of music. "If you want Latin-American numbers, you go to Southern," says Rogers, "if you want standards or show tunes, you ring Chappell. But so far theres' nowhere you go if you want jazz or folk music."

CHARLIE PARKER MUSIC OPENS BRITISH BRANCH

Charlie Parker Music Co. is getting a British branch to be called Charlie Parker Music Co. Ltd. The outlet will be formed and operated by Alan Paramor of Lorna Music Ltd., London. Aubrey Mayhew and Doris Parker are the owners of Charlie Parker Music here.

The Parker firm publishes material with Mayhew Music Co. in the U.S. Plans are underway to spread the operation throughout Europe with offices in Paris, Copenhagen and other key cities.

The Parker-Mayhew combine is publishing the score from the French film, "Les Liaisons Dangereuses." The music was written by jazz pianist Duke Jordan, and Charlie Parker Records is releasing a platter of the score with Jordan conducting the orch.

Liberty Toppers Huddle With EMI on Distrib Deal

London, Jan. 30.

SI Waronker, board chairman, and prexy Al Bennett of Liberty Records are here from Hollywood to huddle with EMI execs on details of new distribution deal recently closed between the two diskeries.

EMI will handle distribution of Liberty product in Europe under the Liberty name. Liberty previously distributed under London Decca title.

FORTUNE TELLERS TO KAPP

The Fortune Tellers, a pop instrumental group, has been inked by Kapp Records. The unit will wax single and album product, with their first session to be held shortly.

Savvy Local Promoters Help Build Japanese Mkt. For American Jazz Acts

Tokyo, Jan. 30.

The flow of American jazz and pop music talent to Japan should be stepped up as a result of the findings of a survey made by Bob Phillips and Billy McDonald of Associated Booking Corp.'s West Coast office. The duo spent five days here at invite of Swan Promotions, currently handling ABC act, The Platters, on Japan tour.

Meeting with leading promoters, they found reason to expand their thinking and include Japan in their territory, which presently comprises the 11 Western mainland states, Hawaii and Australia.

"We have been bursting at the seams and have to broaden our scope," Phillips said. "The jet age has made it possible."

Further explaining their new interest in the Japanese market, McDonald said, "We found an increased number of legitimate promoters who are well financed and successful. And as in the States, we found they specialize in types of talent, be it jazz, pop, hit record artists or film personalities. One promoter will ask for certain acts and the next one will be interested in acts the first one turned down.

"The Japanese promoters know their business," McDonald continued. "They recognize the name acts and even ask about the individual members of a group. They know the difference between a synthetic name—one who sells records but whom people won't go to see—and a genuine draw. They have been making trips to the U. S. and surveying the market deeply. Their recent promotions have been exceptionally good."

As an example of the new savvy of Japanese promoters, McDonald mentioned an episode of several years ago when a headline singer flopped here because he was brought in on short notice and without proper promotion. "They should have turned the act down," McDonald said. "Now they would not take it under those conditions."

Most in demand from the ABC roster is Louis Armstrong & His All Stars. The agents were told that Armstrong's popularity in Japan has been on the upswing since his tour of about nine years ago because of film appearances.

Vegas Steps Up Global Promotion In Bid to Spur More Biz for Inns

Las Vegas, Jan. 30.

Canadian appearances of Abe Schiller, the Las Vegas, ambassador-at-large, are paying off with an increase of Dominion trade into local inns. There has been a marked upbeat in western Canadian registrations in all hotels. These have come largely as a result of Schiller's stints as grandmarshal at the annual Calgary Stampede, his visits to hospitals handing out the phony $1,000 bills to children and participation in many public events in the Dominion.

The Canadian exploitation is in keeping with the increased Vegas promotion in virtually all parts of the world. Schiller, while preaching Las Vegas in general, is employed by the Flamingo Hotel. Not only he is spreading the message but all local hotels are.

The promotions are not aimed at any particular group or time, but try to emphasize Vegas as a year-round resort. The inns obviously must draw on an increasingly wide circle of attendance to maintain current growth patterns. The Flamingo is embarking on a Chinese New Year celebration, has run contests and frequently brings in chartered planeloads of influential newcomers to the area just to show them around.

The potential of Las Vegas is also emphasized by the fact that the Mercury Space Project takes place in this area. Employment in surrounding towns is booming and real estate values are constantly rising. In fact, Moe Dalitz and others in the Desert Inn setup are building a new housing development adjacent to the upcoming Stardust golf course. Many homes in the project are getting swimming pools at $4,500 extra. It's one of the largest developments being built in the area. Land is now selling at about $10,000 an acre in areas near the project.

Vegas, it's claimed, must now look for 11 solid months of business to maintain itself because of constantly increasing investments here. The operators have had to look for new avenues of exploitation not only through Schiller's trips to Canada but to Europe and the Orient.

Originally, Las Vegas was just an incident on a motorist's way to California, and gambling was just for a handful of natives and adventurous passers by. Today, huge traffic by plane, train and automobile is needed to maintain the basic overhead.

Miss Abbott Gives Up AGVA Permit

Chicago, Jan. 30.

Merriel Abbott, longtime house booker for the Hilton Hotels, has resigned as an AGVA franchised agent and is now acting as producer and entertainment consultant for the hostelries. The action came about as a result of the recent AGVA ruling that acts could not pay more than 10% in commissions per booking. This ukase virtually eliminated the role of house booker.

Chi agents say that the change will primarily be one of bookkeeping, with Miss Abbott packaging the shows and selling them to hotels at a profit approximating the 5% she had been receiving in the past. Miss Abbott is known to have acts booked into the Hilton-owned Palmer House and Conrad Hilton as well as the Hotel Corp. of America's Edgewater Beach well into 1963. These acts were signed before the AGVA decree, and, under terms of the ruling can pay her the 5% previously permitted.

HAMID'S AD-PUB CHIEF

Atlantic City, Jan. 30.

Jack Goldman, who last summer handled publicity for the Steel Pier, has been named advertising-publicity director for the Hamid Enterprises. In his new capacity he will handle the Steel Pier and the Hamid-Morton Circus.

He was formerly a Stanley Warner theatre manager in Philadelphia for more than 20 years.

Israeli Censors Okay Bare Bosoms in Ballet

The Israeli censorship board has decided, following a heated debate, that it is not immoral for the Negro femmes of "Le Ballet National du Senegal" to appear bare-bosomed on the stage. Before the preem, a special performance was given for the censors, who gave the green light only after prolonged deliberation.

This implies a radical change by the censors, who only three years ago ordered the female members of another African ensemble to put on the bras; otherwise, no license will be given.

This "liberal" approach is rather surprising, because the performance of the Senegal group is rated pure primitive sex. Israeli critics found the performance too raw. But the audiences like the performances more than the crix.

Philly Grand Jury Fails to Indict In Bruce Dope Case

Philadelphia, Jan. 30.

The January grand jury apparently believed "sick" comic Lenny Bruce was really sick when narcotics squad raiders seized him in his hotel room at the John Bartram last Sept. 29 and confiscated a quantity of drugs.

Charges against Bruce of violating the State narcotics law and illegal possession of drugs were presented to the jurors by the District Attorney's office. The grand jury ignored the bills of indictment.

Dist. Atty. James C. Crumlish Jr. said the jurors heard five witnesses, but he refused to identify them. Bruce, who was appearing at the Red Hill Inn (Pennsauken, N. J.) at the time of the raid, said the drugs had been prescribed for him by two physicians, who backed up his statement at the Magistrate's hearing.

The jury's failure to indict resulted in dismissal of the charges against Bruce; but the comedian may be brought back here anyway.

At the time of his magistrate's hearing, Bruce charged that an offer had been made to him by a Philadelphia lawyer to have the case dropped for $10,000. When he refused, he said, the price was lowered to $3,500, which was also turned down. The D.A.'s office also has been investigating the alleged bribery complaint.

'26' Dice Game, Once A Chi Cafe Staple, Fading Under Police Crackdown

Chicago, Jan. 30.

The dice game of "26," once a staple in most Chi cafes, has virtually disappeared from the Loop and near north side entertainment areas under pressure of a little-heralded crackdown by the police. Saloon operators are making scant fuss over the new and tougher enforcement.

While the game clearly falls within the state and city statutes banning gambling (except for race track betting), it has largely been ignored up to now. An aide to police superintendent O. W. Wilson was quoted as saying: "At best, 26 is gambling, and at worst it is a cover for prostitution."

The clampdown appears to be part of a general tightening of law enforcement in regards to B-girls, prostitutes, jackrolling and other various indoor sports long associated with Chi boozeries. Within the past six months there have been several dozen license suspensions and revocations, mostly for the above offenses.

Tradesters speculate the action is part of a Washington-directed crackdown on sources of income for organized crime. They say that it is the first time that the police have made a concerted drive against the smaller sources of mob money.

Calgary Stampede Ropes Roy Rogers, Dale Evans

Calgary, Alta, Jan. 30.

The Calgary Exhibition & Stampede has signed Roy Rogers, Dale Evans and a supporting cast of 65 for four matinee and six evening performances in Stampede Corral during the 50th annual event, July 9-14.

Included will be the five Rogers children; Trigger and Trigger Jr.; comedian Pat Brady & the Sons of the Pioneers; trumpeter Rafael Mendez; acro-comedienne Tulara Lee; Jay Sisler's Australian shepherd dogs; the Rudells (trampoline) and Homer Garrett's Hollywood Square Dancers.

Amus. Parks Eye Summer Names

The large amusement parks and kiddielands promise to be among the biggest summer name talent buyers, once may even bid against fairs for headliners. Latest to come into the name purchasing sweepstakes is Pleasure Island, Wakefield, Mass., which is shelling out the biggest budget in its history for acts.

The park has already purchased Robert Horton of "Wagon Train" for July 2; Brenda Lee, July 9; Frankie Avalon, July 16; Jimmy Dean, Aug. 6, and Hugh O'Brian, Aug. 13. The remaining spots as well as subsidiary acts are still to be filled.

Last year's success of name bands and acts at Freedomland, N.Y., is said to have been the inspiration for Pleasure Island's splurge. After heavy losses for the first season, Freedomland invested in names and name bands. It came out making a small profit for the second season after heavy amortization.

AGENCIES IRKED AS MCA GETS SYRACUSE

There must have been quite a few disappointments in the booking agency field when it was learned that MCA had sewn up the profitable New York State Fair at Syracuse for this year. Word had gone out that there would be open bids for the show. But one of the board members, puzzled by the spurt of activity, declared that the contract had been awarded to MCA in Chicago last month.

Frank Wirth, an indie fair booker, came up from Florida on the basis that he could put in a bid for the show. General Artists Corp. was also making blueprints for the fair. Other agencies prepared prospectuses for presentation at the N.Y. State Fair Assn., which convened last week in Albany. Wirth, incidentally, returned to Florida as soon as he learned that the show was nailed down by MCA.

Thus far, Neil Sedaka has been set for the fair which is considered to be one of the more lucrative outdoor stands on the outdoor circuit.

Atlanta Copa, a $250,000 Nitery, Bows in Garage

Atlanta, Jan. 30.

Carmen Cavallaro opened yesterday (Mon.) at Atlanta Copa, city's newest night spot. Seating 500, the $250,000 layout (a former hotel garage) is built on four tiers and got under way last week with Dave Gardner headlining opening show.

Appearing with Cavallaro this week are thrush Pepi Runels and Fisher & Marks, comedy team. Lounge section of Copa features a 62-foot bar from men's grill in Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, N.Y. No food is served.

Chick Hedrick, owner-operator of Copa, also owns Domino in Imperial Hotel Lobby and Peppermint Lounge on Peachtree Road. Copa plans name entertainment policy.

King's Waldorf Stand

Alan King, who has been eschewing nitery dates in New York for several years, has been set for the Empire Room of the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria for a three-weeker starting March 26. He'll precede this stand with an engagement at the El San Juan, San Juan, starting Feb. 14.

King's last appearance in a N.Y. cafe was at the Copacabana.

Morris Agency Lures Rosalind Ross From GAC to Build Teenage Singers

The talent development accents at the William Morris Agency have shifted to the teenage sector. It has lured Rosaland Ross and her assistant, Jerry Brandt, from General Artists Corp., where Miss Ross has been in charge of bringing out the more youthful talent.

With the new setup, the Morris office will devote more time to teenage singers and disks. Miss Ross, who will head the department which will also include Paul Cantor, was with GAC for 11 years. She was largely responsible for the expansion of GAC's disk dept. and enlargement of its roster of singers developed via records.

This also marks the first time that the Morris office has nabbed virtually a complete department from another office. Only one of Miss Ross' staff, Sal Saffran, remains with GAC. Miss Ross even brought along her secretary, Esther Suslov. Meantime, another switch from GAC to Morris has been made in the Chi sector. Bob Ehlert moved to the Morris disk and one-nighter dept.

The acquisition of Miss Ross is regarded as important to the Morris agency despite the fact that disks as incubators of cafe-tv talent have been on the downbeat for some time. Some of the office's acts particularly in the one-night fields, have been booked by outside agencies, especially in remote areas and in highly specialized situations. This is likely to be eliminated from now on.

Govt. Eyes Pickup In Fiscal '63 Cafe Biz

Washington, Jan. 30.

Uncle Sam hopefully counts on a slight pickup in nitery trade for the upcoming fiscal year beginning next July 1. President Kennedy's budget for fiscal 1963 forecasts a $1,000,000 increase in revenues from the 10% cabaret tax.

In its revised estimate for the current fiscal year (ending June 30), the budget looks for the same level of cabaret business as last year. The yield from the cabaret bite for both years is pegged at $34,000,000 with the pickup to $35,000,000 slated for fiscal 1963.

Playboy Clubs Up Key Fees; Push Broad Expansion

Chicago, Jan. 30.

Chi headquarters of Playboy Clubs International has revealed that it is uping the key fee of its Miami spot and its flagship club here, and broke ground last week for a new $380,000 club in St. Louis.

The Miami operation is closing its $25 charter roster effective Feb. 1 and will charge the regular $50, and the Chi club is doubling its normal key price to $100. There are currently 10,000 keyholders in Florida, and over 120,000 throughout the country.

St. Louis Playboy Club, located at 3914 Lindell Blvd, in that city, is expected to be completed Aug. 1 of this year. Playboy now has clubs in Chi, Miami and New Orleans, and a fifth is skedded to open in New York in August, '62. The chain is an important talent buyer.

Also under construction are clubs in Detroit, San Francisco and Baltimore, and Washington (Dec., '62) in Boston (Feb., '63) and Los Angeles (Feb., '64). The latter operation (to cost between $4,500,000-$6,000,000) will house Playboy's Coast club and mag headquarters and Show Business Illustrated's western sales and editorial offices.

Hearings Start on Miss. Plea For Injunctions Vs. 11 Gambling Emporiums

Gulfport, Miss., Jan. 30.

Five hearing dates have been set here on requests for anti-gambling injunctions against 11 Gulf Coast night spots. Gambling is wide open on the resort strip between Gulfport and Biloxi, the state alleges, and the petitions for injunctions were filed last month by request of Gov. Ross Barnett.

At the time, however, Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson said he thought gambling on the coast could be stopped by raids, yet—later—he asked for the injunctions, describing the kind of equipment allegedly used in each establishment.

Patterson recently went before Chancellor William G. Hewes in Harrison County Chancery Court in Gulfport and requested "immediate action" against the establishments. A hearing date was set for the Friendship House and Beverly Lounge today (Tues.).

For the High Hat Club, the hearing will be held tomorrow (Wed.). On Feb. 2 hearings will be held for the Fiesta Club, Trader John's, Sea 'n' Sirloin restaurant and the Cubana Beach Motel. Five other spots are due for later dates.

William's Blackpool Date

Blackpool, Eng., Jan. 30.

Danny Williams, upcoming ballad singer, whose waxing of "Moon River" is high on the charts, is set for cast of George & Alfred Black's summer layout at the Winter Gardens Theatre, opening June 23.

Arthur Haynes, tv comedian, will star, and acts lined up include Joan Savage & Ken Morris. Williams is also being pacted for U.S. bookings.

Bernstein Heads GAC 1-Nite Dept.

Sid Bernstein, who has been promoting various one-nighters around the country with John Drew, has joined General Artists Corp.'s N.Y. office to head the one-night department and to start up a jazz section. According to Buddy Howe, head of the GAC act dept., negotiations with Bernstein were instituted some time ago, before it was known that Rosalind Ross was leaving. Therefore, he added, Bernstein is not to be construed as a replacement for Miss Ross, who has joined the William Morris Agency (see separate story).

Bernstein will work with performers playing arena shows as well as spot talent in jazz rooms. He was formerly with the Shaw Artists Bureau, and prior to that with Lou Walters Enterprises. In recent months, he promoted Judy Garland in several dates, and also promoted some holiday shows at the Paramount Theatre, Brooklyn.

COPA, N.Y., BOOKING OFFBEAT TALENT

The Copacabana, N.Y., is looking off the beaten path for talent. The spot has signed Rosemary Clooney for an April 5 stand, Frankie Avalon for June 22 as an inducement for the prom trade, and as a concession to The Twist craze has booked Chubby Checker for March 22.

Set for a deal, but with no date nailed down, is Timi Yuro, who was bought by operator Jules Podell off the Ed Sullivan show recently. Johnny Mathis, who had to cancel out of a Copa date recently, is likely to play that commitment in May or June.

Court Peels Off 'Guilty' For 2 Dayton Strippers

Dayton, O., Jan. 30.

Taffey O'Neill, the "Wow Girl," and stripper Elizabeth Becker, "just call me Zsa-Zsa," were found guilty of indecent exposure in Municipal Court here last week, following their arrest at the Mayfair Theatre. Both filed motions for a new trial, to be ruled on today (Tues.) by Judge Cecil E. Edwards.

The pair testified that at no time during their separate performances did they completely bare themselves, and said they were covered at the end of their dances. Police officers disagreed.

El Rey Club, Searchlight, Nev., Sold For $1.5 Mil. Hrs. Before Fire Guts It

Searchlight, Nev., Jan. 30.

Sale to a Reno firm of the El Rey Club—burned out casino and all—was completed Monday (22) several hours after the resort burned to the ground. The club, 55 miles south of Las Vegas, recently starred such performers as Sally Rand, Peggy DeCastro and Wingy Manone.

Owner Willie Martello said he sold the El Rey properties to the First Capital Development Corp. of Reno for the agreed price of $1,500,000. Announcement of the sale was made one week before the fire.

Martello said the loss, $800,000, was fully insured.

He said the new owners told him they plan a $1,700,000 100-room hotel-casino on the site of the destroyed building. Martello said a Los Angeles architect, Paul Williams, is designing the new building but a starting date for construction has not been set. He added that the new motif will be "all western."

The former owner said he is convinced the fire which leveled his casino - bar - restaurant - showroom started in kitchen above the cooking range. About 150 people were in the casino when the fire started at 8:30 p.m. Sunday (21) but all were evacuated to safety.

Two musical groups, Nancy Kaye & The Alibis and the Tony Lovello Revue were appearing at the El Rey Club up until the time it was destroyed.

DOLORES GRAY'S N.Y. DATE

Dolores Gray has been signed for the Feb. 26 spot at the Waldorf-Astoria, N.Y., which had been originally allotted to Eddie Fisher. It's Miss Gray's first N.Y. cafe appearance in some years.

Fisher may play that date in May.

NOT 'FIRST' GUEST STAGER

Radio City Music Hall Used John Murray Anderson

Editor, VARIETY:

Your piece on page 2 (Jan. 24) stating that Marc Platt will be Radio City Music Hall's first guest director is not quite accurate for in 1933 (or was it early in '34?) the late John Murray Anderson was retained to produce three spectacular stage shows, two of which were Oscar Wilde's "The Young King" and "The Nightingale and The Rose."

The late Clark Robinson designed the sets and Vincent Minnelli, now a Metro-producer-director, created the costumes. I ought to know, I was 16 or 17 at the time. Minelli's assistant and later, Murray Anderson's.

Blast in Sue Carson's Car Almost K.O.'s Her Date at Carillon, Miami

Miami Beach, Jan. 30.

Sue Carson made her Carillon Hotel return booking here last Tuesday night (23) after a close call while motoring, with her husband and nine-month daughter, from their Hollywood home to Florida, which resulted in the destruction of their car.

Comedienne-songstress' husband, Alfred Shyretto (of the cycling Shyrettos family act), was driving in Alabama when she smelled smoke. The couple clambered out with the infant just in time. An ensuing explosion even shattered the baby's milk bottles.

Borrowing blankets from a roadside shelter occupied by a Negro family, they made connections with the Montgomery airport and arrived by air just in time for the Carillon replacement of Jack Durant in Lou Walter's French revue here.

Miss Carson's wardrobe and even the new song she was memorizing, as her husband was driving, was destroyed. Shyretto in recent months has been acting as the comedienne's personal manager.

Chep Suery Opens On Site of Pitt Town House

Pittsburgh, Jan. 30.

The Town House, once one of Pitt's regular stops for name talent, officially passed into limbo Tues. (23) when the Ming Tree, a Polynesian restaurant, opened on the same site.

Operated for years by Mike and Dan Abriola, the Town House presented such stars as Martha Raye, Sammy Davis Jr., Shelley Berman and Erroll Garner but never was able to quite make a dent in the big biz of its neighbor, the Holiday House.

Last year, the Abriolas put the room up for sale and had many offers, but they didn't complete a deal until the owners of the Ming Tree came along with their plush plans for a class chop suey. Del Monaco and his quartet, a fixture at the Holiday House for years, are in on a steady basis at the Ming Tree.

Goulet's Nitery Bow

Robert Goulet, lead in "Camelot," will make his supper club debut in the Persian Room of the Plaza Hotel, N.Y., Nov. 7 of next season. He's set to leave the show in September.

Goulet will play several dates out of town to break in the act, but deals are still to be finalized. He's being handled by MCA.

Cafes Top Work Source For Mexican Acts in '61

Mexico City, Jan. 30.

Mexico's top night spots fared very well in 1961 and while owners have not given out any financial statements, the National Assn. of Actors revealed clubs were prime source of work for its membership last year.

Second major work source for actors was legit, especially in bedroom farces. In third place came motion pictures with vaude, radio and television following in that order.

Figures based on work contracts registered with the Mexican Dept. of Labor indicated that there were 2,560 pacts for nightclub turns in cabarets classified as "de luxe;" 2,001 for the so-called comedy theatre, which is bedroom farce at its broadest; 1,446 film contracts; 771 in vaudeville, 700 in second class and lower clubs and 225 in television.

These figures, though offering a sharp contrast with other released data, were unexplained by the actors' union. For example, it claims that its members receive 33% each from both picture and television appearances, in total income tallies. Therefore, how this is attained by 1,446 for former and 225 contracts in latter has puzzled entertainment industry.

AGVA Ropes In 3 Rodeo Clowns

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Three members of Rodeo Cowboys Assn. had to join American Guild of Variety Artists before they could appear in the current Fort Worth rodeo, which started a 10-day engagement last Saturday (27).

Irvin Mazzei, AGVA Coast chief, had ruled that unless RCA rodeo "acts" joined his union, tv cowpokes who did belong to AGVA couldn't work with them. To appear in rodeo, trio payed $150 initiation fees each and a half year's dues, $18 each.

The acts which AGVA demanded join its roster are rodeo clowns and trick riders, not regular bronc busters or bull wranglers.

Amity between AGVA and RCA means that two "Bonanza" vidpix series stars, Loren Green and Dan Blocker—booked sometime ago for date—now are playing it. They are AGVA members. Intra-unions' peace also means that Anita Bryant and Rex Allen will work San Antonio rodeo, which follows Fort Worth roping.

Last year Mazzei offered RCA a deal whereby if all its "acts" joined AGVA, latter would waive its initiation fee. None did, so Mazzei withdrew that offer last month, and simultaneously notified all AGVA members they could not work with RCA "acts" unless latter got AGVA cards.

WALDORF UPS HENTSCHEL

Kurt G. Hentschel, former room service manager of the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y., has been upped to banquet manager of the hotel. He came to the Hilton organization in 1957 at the Plaza Hotel, N. Y., at that time under Hilton management, and worked in other outlets before coming to the Waldorf.

Alfred Matt was simultaneously appointed banquet headwaiter for the inn. He was formerly banquet manager for the Pittsburgh-Hilton.

as we knew them, are no longer as strong as they used to be."

Hence, there is considerable concentration by all agencies for bookings in the 2,000 colleges all over the country.

F.A. prexy is now in midst of negotiations with International Talent Agency to act as rep in college field. Larry Bennett and Bert Block of ITA will continue to operate out of Gotham if and when deal is cemented. It's part of F.A.'s expansion plan which would include Ashley-Steiner, recently having acquired Lillian Small Agency following her death; aligning with Grade Organization in London, and Kaufman-Lerner tieup in Italy.

Chubby Checker Twists 15,000 Kids Into Frisco Arena for $44,800 Take

San Francisco, Jan. 30.

Some 15,000 youngsters paid $44,800, at $3.75 top, to see and hear Chubby Checker at Cow Palace Saturday (27) night, while outside the soldout arena hundreds of other teenagers fought a series of violent fistfights and a 19-year-old marine was stabbed.

Trouble began when "Soldout" sign was posted at 7:30 P.M., leaving an estimated 2,000 youngsters ticketless and surly. Their surliness erupted into series of brawls which cops said occurred "every two minutes." Marine's knife wound was minor. And another 13-year-old boy's injury, from a severe kick to stomach, was also relatively minor. At least five other youths suffered slight injuries.

Inside the big hall 55 cops had their hands full but managed to keep order by threatening to turn the lights on "if anybody starts dancing" — actually, youngsters occasionally did Twist on their chairs.

Checker was preceded by a series of disk acts, including Dick & Deedee, The Untouchables and Bobby Freeman.

Promotion was work of a Frisco record plugger named Pete Marino who said he'd cut two deejays, Bob Mitchell and Tom Donahue from Bartells' KYA, in on pieces of gross. "It's a way of getting the station behind me," explained Marino. KYA deejays plugged the Checker bash hard for fortnight.

Checker's take for his night's work was about $23,000. Cow Palace officials said the turnout was a record for a stage show there "unless you consider President Kennedy a stage show."

Winnipeg's Oldest Nitery Folds; Jessel Passes Up Most of His $4,500 Pay

Winnipeg, Jan. 30.

The city's oldest nitery, the Rancho Don Carlos, has closed its doors. It was the only club in town featuring big-name entertainment, and the first to shutter in seven years.

Billed at the time was George Jessel, whose tour of Canada had been billed as a "last goodbye" before his retirement in March. Jessel, contracted for a week, cancelled out and let owner Barney Gorenstein off the hook for the bulk of a salary tab which could have reached $4,500.

Gorenstein blamed the club's failure on cost of name-talent, apathy of the public and the fact that Winnipeg has the largest number of cabaret licenses per capita of any city in Canada.

Loss on operations since Feb. ruary, 1960, when Gorenstein bought the club from Charlie Mazzone, was "about nil." But at the time he assumed liabilities of $40,000 which he has been unable to pay off.

Shuttering also resulted in cancellation of a contract with Eartha Kitt, who was scheduled for a week starting Sat. (27).

Former owner Mazzone, now a resident of Edmonton, where he operates a similarly named nitery, is believed to be interested in reopening the club which he ran at a profit for some 15 years.

HUB LICENSING BOARD SHUTTERS SHOW BAR

Boston, Jan. 30.

The Show Bar, longtime Huntington Ave. nitery, was closed indefinitely by the Boston Licensing Board Thursday (25) for levying a cover charge for a Twist dance, plus complaints of service to a minor, and scant food supplies to substantiate a common victualler's license.

Police said they found a $1 cover charge sign at a table at the entrance and saw couples doing The Twist. A cover charge is not legal for entrance to a restaurant. Sgt. Frank Walsh said he went to the kitchen Jan. 19, and found a cold range, crockery and containers, a rusty sauce pan, and a refrigerator with beer, but no food.

The manager, James Gerl, said there had been a flood in the kitchen and renovation was in progress.

Cooper Union Prepping A Vaude 'Kaleidoscope'

Cooper Union College based in New York is planning "A Kaleidoscope of Vaudeville" in its Great Hall Feb. 9.

Performers to appear in this show, for which no admission will be charged, include the Mura Dehn dance group, Johnny Hudgins, James Berry (Berry Bros.), Bert Gibson, Buster Brown, Stomp (& Stompy), Baby Lawrence, Johnny & Gail Taylor and the Codaks. Among the musicians retained are Dave Martin, Buster Bailey, Milt Henton, Dick Vance, Danny Barker and Fred Moore.

Jones, Helen Grayco File $750 Pay Claim Vs. Air Force Sgt. Over Hawaii Gig

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

Spike Jones and his singer-wife Helen Grayco, through American Guild of Variety Artists, have filed pay a claim against U.S. Air Force Sgt. Wilson J. Hutcheson, who books talent for officer and NCO clubs at Hickam Field, Hawaii. Couple sailed on one of Matson Lines' talent cruises early in December and while in Honolulu were booked for four nights at Hickam clubs by Hutcheson. AGVA complaint states. It's further alleged that Hutcheson came up with only three dates—all played. Jones and Miss Grayco want the pay for fourth night.

Contracts provided Miss Grayco get $1,500 for four evenings. Jones $1,500. Thus the performers want $375 each. AGVA Coast chief Irvin Mazzei, who is demanding Hutcheson pay, states pacts are play-or-pay.

Hickam clubs regularly buy acts, and have franchises with AGVA and with AFM Local 677, Honolulu. Strictly contractually, Jones worked engagements under AFM pact and AGVA (to which Miss Grayco belongs) officially can ask only coin for her. However, in Hawaii, the two unions have close-working ties.

The clubs are in no wise official U.S. military operations, but are maintained by their respective memberships. Jones observed: "We were bought for four nights, hence our claim. We look upon the engagements purely as commercial ones, which they are in that audiences are limited by club memberships and all servicemen cannot attend."

The comic added that if AGVA's complaint to Sgt. Hutcheson does not result in payoff he will channel another complaint through AFM.

The sergeant "manages" Hickam clubs and his duties entail booking talent for them.

BWAY ASSN. ELECTS LEIGH AS PRESIDENT

Douglas Leigh, head of the electric spectaculars firm, has been elected president of the Broadway Assn., succeeding James V. Edwards of Town Hall. Organization seeks to police the Broadway area.

Others elected are Thomas V. Kelly, of Macy's, first veepee; Richard L. Rafalsky, of Mark Rafalsky, realtors, second vice president; Joseph D. Johnson, of Western Union third veepee; John D. Dornbusch, of Central Savings Bank, fourth v.p.; Robert M. Simpson, N. Y. Telephone Co., secretary, and Walter G. Schaerer, Empire Trust Co., treasurer. Managing director continues to be Godfrey A. Stamm.

Kabuki-But-Modern, Too

Japanese dancer Suzushi Hanayagi made her American solo debut Jan. 11 at the Hunter College Playhouse, New York, with the Japan Society as sponsor.

Though steeped in her country's classical tradition (Kabuki), her Gotham appearance was devoted entirely to contemporary dance. She's in U. S. on an exchange visa, and since last spring has been appearing ensemble with the Martha Graham troupe.

Ethel Merman to Make Her Nitery Bow in Vegas

Ethel Merman will play her first nitery stand in the fall. She's been pacted by the Flamingo Hotel, Las Vegas, with the date not definitely set yet.

Flamingo operator Morris Lansburgh has been going after new names of late. Mitzi Gaynor, who recently played two dates at the hotel, was given a slice of the spot for her first engagement there.

CNE Grandstand Show Earns 1st Profit in 3 Years

Toronto, Jan. 30.

For the first time in three years, the annual fortnightly Canadian National Exhibition 24,000-seat grandstand show made a profit and will continue its policy of non importation of American headliners, according to Controller Donald Summerville of the city council and a director of the CNE.

Summerville said he also wants a bigger slice this summer of receipts from midway attractions and food stands.

After paying the production costs of $443,446 for the separate afternoon and evening grandstand shows, the 1961 CNE budget will show a surplus of about $28,000 reported Summerville who is also a partner in Famous Players Canadian Corp. The entire CNE setup made an operating profit of $231,165 but debt charges on buildings, paid for by Toronto, will total more than $800,000.

The operating surplus of the evening grandstand show was offset by afternoon performances of the Shriner's Circus, which "broke even," according to Summerville. Meanwhile, he reported, the CNE is negotiating with Chicago interests to produce an $80,000 afternoon grandstand show, the Shriner's Circus pulling out of this summer's CNE venture.

He emphasized that the separate evening grandstand show would follow last year's all-Canadian pattern. He specifically referred to the "dropping of $255-065" in evening grandstand show profits when Phil Silvers and Victor Borge were alternately hired during the 1960 CNE presentation. He added that the all-Canadian format—and a $28,000 profit last year—"has certainly proved me right."

Frazier Makes the Scene at Mass. Inn, but 'Lee Wiley' Wasn't the McCoy

Boston, Jan. 30.

"Will the real Lee Wiley please stand up?" could have been the title for a little piece of odd drama which developed between George Frazier, jazz authority columnist on the Boston Herald, the Schine Inn at Chicopee, and "Lee Wiley."

Frazier, who wrote the liner notes for the Storyville LP, "Lee Wiley Sings Rodgers and Hart," released around 1956, and is an authority on the singer, received an invite from the inn's pressagent to come up and catch "Lee Wiley." He drove over 80 miles of "snow-lined roads and through intermittently driving snow," in his own words, to find a singer billed as "Lee Wiley" performing. It wasn't the Lee Wiley that he knew.

The management of the inn, according to Frazier, had accepted the singer as the real Lee Wiley and was billing her that way. Frazier suggested to the management that they take their signs down, and got compliance plus guarantees there would be no further misunderstanding.

Blasts the Deception

On his return to the typewriter, Frazier blasted the deception in his Boston Herald column: "As of early last evening in this town some 80 miles west of Boston . . . the real Lee Wiley had yet to stand up. But this was scarcely surprising, since, at that twilight time, the real Lee Wiley was at home on the east side of Manhattan.

"What was surprising, however, was that at that hour in the cocktail lounge of the Schine Inn in this town, a woman claiming to be the real Lee Wiley was not only standing up, but also, by Heavens, lifting her voice in song of sorts.

"For all I know, this girl may be named Lee Wiley, too, but there are those of us to whom she will never be, so to speak, the real Lee Wiley. Considering that, I think it would be better for all concerned if this Lee Wiley — the one at Schine Inn . . . were to change her name."

A 12-Yr. Problem

The real Miss Wiley, who is in semi-retirement, stated at her New York home that she has been faced with the problem of the spurious Lee Wiley for about a dozen years, first having bumped into it when as an RCA singer, she would be some other place when actually asked how she liked Florida or she hadn't been there.

Miss Wiley says she has taken the problem to attorneys who tell her that she must enjoin the spurious Miss Wiley in every state. She has also complained to the American Guild of Variety Artists which says it can do nothing since the other Miss Wiley is not a member.

To the best of her knowledge, Miss Wiley says, the other Miss Wiley lives in Clifton, N.J., and that's not here real name.

'Ice Capades' Stockholders Weigh 4 Offers; Blader's $8-Mil. Annual Biz

Pittsburgh, Jan. 30.

One of the most valuable traveling shows in the history of show business may be sold today (Tues.) at a stockholders' meeting at the Hotel St. Moritz in New York, according to a statement made here by John H. Harris, chief stockholder and general manager of "Ice Capades." At press time no decision had been reached, because of a lengthy agenda. Some feel a turndown is most likely.

The 12 stockholders of four corporations, Lone Palm Realty Icecapades Inc. Ice Capades International Inc. and North American Attractions will meet to discuss four offers made during the past few months for the show property that does an annual gross of over $8,000,000. Among the 12 are Walter Brown of the Boston Garden, Lou Pieri of the Providence Arena, Lou Jacobs of Buffalo, Nate Podoloff of the New Haven Arena, John Sollenberger of the Hershey Chocolate Co., Vic Bizer Tyrell of the land Arena, Pete Tyrell of the Philadelphia Arena and Harris, himself. Other stockholders are wives of the principals.

Harris said that he would present the various offers to the stockholders today and if they vote not to accept any, the matter will be closed until the next meeting which will be held this summer in Atlantic City. He added that nothing would induce him to remain with the blader if it were sold and he would only be interested in a capital gains deal.

He said the company must be sold on its earnings record and not on his remaining with the company. He also added that he will not talk to anyone in the future except those who put up $100,000 good faith money.

He noted that an offer from General Tire came from a broker, and he would like to talk to the principals before he presented this proposal to the stockholders.

"Ice Capades" was formed 22 years ago by Harris and members of the Arena Managers Assn. who are the principal stockholders in the firm.

Stan Irwin Turns Comic Again for Vegas Charity

Las Vegas, Jan. 30.

Etan Irwin, who started as a comedian, is returning to his original vocation for the benefit of charity. Now entertainment director of the Sahara Hotel here he is to play the lead and direct "Make a Million" to be presented March 17 for the benefit of the Las Vegas Jewish Community Centre.

Most of the cast will comprise localites, but Irwin is expected to recruit other professionals into this project as well.

Hub's Lone Burley Eyes New Site But Bumps Up Against Civic Opposition

Boston, Jan. 30.

Boston's one remaining burlesque theatre is seeking a home.

The Old Howard Casino, which added the Old Howard to its billing after the demise of the celebrated burlesque house on Howard St., has to leave its Hanover St. location to make way for a government centre. The management would like to move to the old Lancaster film theatre across from North Station, but clergymen and businessmen strongly oppose the transfer.

At a hearing conducted by city censor Richard J. Sinnott, chief of the licensing division of Mayor Collins' office, a spokesman for the burlesquer warned that the Lancaster will be turned into a "Twist parlor" unless the city allows the "Casino Follies," name under which the burlesque house is registered, to transfer to the premises.

Attorney George A. McLaughlin, representing owners of the Casino, declared that relocation to the North Station area would result in a $225,000 improvement for the district.

Franklin Fox, president of the North Station Merchants' Assn., said transfer of the burlesque house into the area would "destroy, without question, our entire organization" and the program of extensive private rehabilitation. Pictures outside the burlesque theatre "should not be in an area where impressionable youths" pass by to attend Boston Garden events, said attorney Clyde Patten, representing the merchants' group.

Alleged Zoning Violation May Shutter Loop's 1st New Nightclub in Years

Chicago, Jan. 30.

Kit-Kat Club, first new nitery in Chi's Loop in years, is in danger of being shuttered by the city's zoning admisinstrator only three months after its opening. The Randolph St. club (above Flo's Restaurant) had been operated as a nitery under several different names from 1941 until 1960.

The area in which the club is located was zoned in 1957 as a restricted central business district in which supper and nightclubs are prohibited, although cabarets operating prior to the rezoning many continue to operate.

Zoning administrator John Maloney has ruled that the year in which the room was dark exempts it from provision about continuing operation in the law. Samuel L. Levine, owner of Flo's and the Kit-Kat Club, has maintained to the city zoning board of appeals that the room was just dark for remodeling. A ruling by the appeal board is expected early next month.

GROUP BUYS L.I. CLUB IN $1,000,000 DEAL

El Patio Beach Club, Atlantic Beach, L.I., razed by a fire last September, has been sold to an investment group headed by William Michaelman for a sum reported to be around $1,000,000. The purchaser plans construction of a $750,000 cocktail lounge and restaurant to replace the destroyed structures.

A name talent policy is contemplated for the new operation. Blueprints call for the nitery section of the structure to seat 1,000 while the cocktail lounge will accommodate 500. Another public room for functions will seat 400.

Thusfar, the Tito Puente Orch has been signed for the nitery and the McClevertys go into the lounge at the start of the season.

Waldorf-Astoria, N.Y.

Pearl Bailey, Milt Shaw & Emery Deutsch Orchs; $4 cover.

Pearl Bailey has played more varieties of niteries locally than probably any other entertainer around. She has appeared in class and mass rooms, intimeries and barns, and in each situation made an impact. She has been a regular at the Empire Room of the Waldorf-Astoria for some years, and each time, she drops a hint that she has changed somewhat and even progressed.

This time around, Miss Bailey seems to be relying less on her usual lazy and tired style. She has a more forthright manner. She gets to the heart of the matter in short order and then toys with the audience.

This slight change of technique is all to the good, since it gives her a wider latitude. There are times when it seems, she'll run through a number straight and impress as a singer, but then, comes a shaft of comedy and she changes the mood and pace.

The Negro singer's catalog is virtually unchanged, which seems to be an assist inasmuch as it provides a norm with which her styles can be compared. The environs of the Waldorf brighten her not. There are those adventures of her salad days that skate the propriety of the room, and "From Mouton to Muskrat to Mink" has a few connotations that delight the assemblage.

In all instances, her asides, and sudden thrusts of comedy add up to an extremely pleasant and satisfying cafe session. Miss Bailey's informality and surefire projection make her one of the hit shows on the saloon circuit.

The backing is by Milt Shaw whose sidemen help with the comedy, and Emery Deutsch supplies the alternate dance incentives. Per usual, the excellent Empire room staff headed by Louis Siccardi, is an added plus to the evening.

Dunes, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Jan. 25.

Patti Page, a regular attraction at the Desert Inn for the past 10 years, waltzes downStrip to the Dunes for her latest Vegas outing. Firstnighters found the comely songstress in top form as her distinctive tones deliver 20 songs, including a medley of her discliicks, and "Misty," "Boll Weevil" (with guitar), "Love You, Love You" (in which she's joined by her conductor-83er Rocky Cole to fine effect), "Go On Home" (her new big seller), and the trademark, "Tennessee Waltz." Bill Reddie's orch (14) solidly backs.

Program features Guy Marks in the comedy spot. The impressionist, a welcome returnee to the Strip, showed how a real pro operates when he gracefully worked around two faulty opening-night microphones. Marks pulls consistent yorks with his versions of such non-yockable subjects as coughs, saws, and birds. His danceband singer, tv commercials and celeb carbons are classics, and he tops the turn with a very funny "Boris Karloff Sings Belafonte."

Wilda Taylor showcases herself as a shapely, well-trained ballerina in Earl Barton's colorful Parisian production number, with 12 skilled girl and two boy dancers. The handsome, virile Art Johnson clicks as vocalist.

This production, presented by Major Riddle, is in for four weeks.

Eden Roc, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, Jan. 27.

Alan King, Barry Sisters, Little Buck, Art Freeman Orch; $3.50-$6.50 per, minimums.

The Cafe Pompei of this swankery boasts one of the most potent seasonal talent lineups in its long history. Current bill is composed of the type of younger acts that have won strong followings here and illustrates the canny booking policy of prexy Harry Mufson, with turnaway biz at first and heavy second seshes.

Alan King's a regular returnee to this big room. Obvious reason for this is evidenced in the biz he draws. There's an expectancy around the room's precincts on his intro, and per every trip he doesn't let them down; launching the laugh sesh with a flock of new waggery that's right out of the current news, such as a howl-raising lampoon on the phone company's turn to all-digit dialings and resultant added confusion to the average man's already mixed up daily life.

Another tip-topical bit is workover of the auto insurance deals that save money for "safe" drivers. It's a biting, incisive routine bearing intelligent lines that key constant response via the self-identification among the auditors.

Same goes for King's standards on suburbia, life with wife, kids, mothers and in-laws. In his forthright, no-nonsense delivery it adds up to as solid a standup comedy turn as is playing the upper bracket cafe circuit today. He takes over with authority and offs to we-want-more returns.

The Barry Sisters must be given credit for solid draw values too; they're longtime faves in this resort. Like King, they come back with fresh material—in songbook—to delight the listeners.

Their arrangements are imaginative, and their delivery brings off with verve the harmonics and counterpoint that has always distinguished their work and lent it flavor and class. Per every appearance, the gowning is smartly haute couture to add to the attractive duo's sight values.

Little Buck is a slick young acro-tapster who sets a sparkling pace with a gasp-raising set of spins, split-slides and precision taps. Art Freeman and his crew showback adeptly.

Next in view: Milton P[illegible] & Co. Thurs. (1). Lary.

Colony, London

London, Jan. 23.

Sandu Scott, Mike Mullins Trio, Ken Penney Orch; $6.50 minimum.

It's a fast return engagement for Sandu Scott at this Berkeley Square restaurant—and that's eloquent testimony to her popularity with the paying customers. She completed a stand here only a fortnight ago, and garnered heavy national press publicity by her nightly demonstrations of The Twist.

She's following a similar routine, teeing off with half a dozen or so special material numbers, then going into a frenetic display of the new dance craze. On opening night (22), Van Johnson was lured from a ringside table to join the star in a Twist routine.

Miss Scott, who is a blonde looker, has a vivacious personality and a selection of songs to match. She opens in boisterous fashion with "I Travel Light," then goes on to sing about how a smart gal can make a million on the stock market. With the Mike Mullins trio providing on-stage backgrounding, she segues into a lively number "Who Put the Bop," changes the pace slightly with "A Bon Chapeau" and a calypso entry.

Then comes the twist session, and for 15 minutes Miss Scott shows off her terping skill, displaying incredible energy as the pace gets hotter. Ken Penney's combo offers lively, vigorous accompaniment for the cabaret, while the Mike Mullins trio adds the intimate touch for two or three of her numbers. Myro.

Village Vanguard, N.Y.

Modern Jazz Quartet, Bill Evans Trio; $2.50 cover.

This Greenwich Village basement room continues its jazz policy with a return of the Modern Jazz Quartet and Bill Evans Trio which closed Sunday night (28).

MJQ, which plays few clubdates, is a good bet any time because of its perfection, class and an audience reach that's greater than most modern jazz groups. Emphasis is on the amplified vibes virtuosity of Milt Jackson in solo and melodic unison with leader John Lewis on piano.

Lewis contributes greatly himself with sharp, sotto solos that have a fine beat and overtones of keyboard jazz styles that go back aways and forward too. There's also fine rhythm support from Percy Heath on bass and Connie Kay, on drums.

Bill Evans Trio has a more introverted style than seems necessary considering the talent of the musicians. Evans is a pianoist revered by the progressive coterie, however, and at his Vanguard dates pulls an especially loyal following. Bill.

Palmer House, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Gene Barry appears to be coming full cycle in his show biz career. He started as a band singer on a New York radio station a couple of decades ago, traveled with the orch in niteries and ballrooms, did a stint in musical comedy, thence to the Coast for films and eventually his role as the cane-carrying white collar cowboy on tv. He's now back as a singer on the cafe circuit and looks a hot prospect for musical comedy.

There's no doubt that Barry has the stuff of legituner luminescence. It shines throughout his nitery act, coming through in his poise, polish, sturdy pipes and astute showmanship.

His strong femme appeal is best capsulized in the title of one of his special-material numbers—"Charm, Style and Sex." A major factor in his clicko turn is musical director Al Pellegrini's great arrangements. They're superbly attuned to Barry's on-stage image and lusty songstering.

Barry's songalog is neatly interspersed with low-key and charming patter and some reputable hoofing. He brings the auditors into the act for a sing-along-clap-along version of "Never On Sunday," croons "Thank Heaven for Little Girls" to a volunteer distaffer, and vends such staples as "Make Someone Happy," "Just In Time" and "Life Is Just a Bowl of Cherries" pleasingly.

Opening the show are Lawrence (Stephens) & (Spouse) Carroll, a youthfully fresh and exciting dance team. They work in both classical ballroom adagio and modern jazz idioms with equal proficiency and flair, and their lifts, tosses, and twirls are graceful and breathcatching.

Xavier Cugat & Abbe Lane and Augie & Margo open Feb. 8 for three weeks. Mor.

365 Club, S. F.

San Francisco, Jan. 26.

Lili St. Cyr, Paul Desmond, Dale Babcock, Cathy Stuart, Shaw-Hitchcock Dancers (15), Roy Palmer Orch (8); $2-$2.50 cover.

Lili St. Cyr must be the cleanest woman in North America. She has been taking a bath every night for as long as man can remember, never changing her act a jot.

Since the formula is successful, there seems no reason to change the act, and it is successful. The crowds are still turning out to see Miss St. Cyr doff her peignoir and towel at Bimbo Giuntoli's 365 Club, and are still getting a charge out of this routine, three times a night.

Miss St. Cyr has made one single concession to modernity: she's changed her hair color from blonde to a sort of bronzey red.

Paul Desmond, on the other hand, has changed his act considerably, all to the good. This youngish comic, a little heavier than when he last appeared in Frisco, now offers 19 minutes of swift standup material focused on some gags about President Kennedy and on a long bit about GI homes.

He uses his tenor voice effectively for a few funny song parodies and shows he's picked up a lot of poise—and fast, effective lines—in touring the country.

Dale Babcock is a standout dancer and Cathy Stuart a pleasant singer in the 67-minute Shaw-Hitchcock production. Roy Palmer's orch offers solid backing.

Show runs through March 1. Stef.

Interlude, L. A.

Troy Walker & the Hustlers, Joey Dee & the Starliters; no cover, no minimum.

"The Battle of The Twist" proved a clear-cut victory for the Interlude, Gene Norman's newly-reopened second story nook and current lair-apparent for disciples of Twistianity, at least west of the River Hudson. Neither rain, sleet, snow or hail could deter aficionados of this burgeoning phenomenon of the shifty, schizothymic '60s from flocking to this upstairs hippodrome where an SRO throng assembled to materialize a ballroom scene.

Principal perpetrators of this answer to an L. A. nitery entrepreneur's dream of glory: "combatants" Joey Dee & the Starliters (who hold over at the Crescendo, or "downstairs" at Norman's "upstairs") and Troy Walker & the Hustlers (who hold forth "upstairs" for a week with options, certain to be exercised if this kind of action continues).

There's a possible discrepancy in the color scheme of this seemingly perfect nitery rainbow, however; a slight imperfection in cash-register green caused by the preponderance of pink-cheeked, allowance-conscious Twisters and disproportionate scarcity of grizzled guzzlers-spenders. Youth must be served where The Twist holds sway, but sheer volume will have to plug the dollar breach, unless perhaps current notions of an admission charge are activated.

Fresh off the obscure griddle of a Pico pizzeria, Walker & the Hustlers or "the Coast's own answer to The Twist," are making their big-time debut. Although the quintet never quite matches the smooth syncopated slam of the established Starliter sextet, such nuance of artistry is not apt to disturb the average Twister, who has enough trouble dodging errant elbows and derrieres.

Unbewhiskered, pompadorably-coiffured, wail-toned warbler Walker heads up a youthful, lavender-sweatered aggregate of two steel guitarists, one drummer and a saxist. What comes out is a chant full of sound and fury, signifying nothing save, to the dedicated Twister, a music that filters majestically from the ear into the soul and out through the various bone sockets.

The upshot is a fascinating glimpse into the heart of The Twist era, a must-see excursion for anyone anxious to be part of his time. As long as The Twist endures—and it's not about to expire—Walker, the Hustlers and the Interlude are apt to be basking in its reflected glory. Tube.

Riviera, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, Jan. 22.

Dennis Day, Mamie Van Doren, Harry Nofal, Kay Brown, George Arnold Dancers (15), Jack Cathcart Orch (13); presented by Ben Goffstein; choreography, Miriam Nelson and Jack Baker; Day's orchestrations by George Wild; Miss Van Doren's Act written and produced by Jack Brooks; stage direction, Milt Bronson; $4 minimum.

The Dennis Day-Mamie Van Doren package is a natural—it's a good balance of songs, dances, and comedy by the stars, plus a couple of handsome production numbers.

Day's act, except for the closing medley of Irish songs, is a different one than he presented here at his last outing. Highlight is a series of sketches in which, with terpers Jan Holler and Kathy Gale, he spoofs the songs expected to be nominated for Academy Awards.

The dialog, dancing, and outlandish costumes pull the yocks. The turn, choreographed by Miriam Nelson, is well-paced, and Day again proves himself a topdrawer standup comic. Songs include "Comes Once In A Lifetime," "Make Someone Happy," "First Born," and "Sound of Music."

Miss Van Doren, who probably would be the first to admit she's no Eydie Gorme when it comes to vocals, is such a spectacular looking blonde and strong in the dancing department that she won over her firstnight audience shortly after her entrance.

She makes four costume changes, exiting in a flesh-colored leotard which showcases every curve. Singer-dancers Guy Chandler and Don Crawford provide strong support for Miss Van Doren, skillfully keeping the show on the road during her gown changes, and acting as excellent teammates for her on-stage routines.

Drawing heaviest applause on opening night was a number in which the star sings to Chandler and Crawford while they wear uncannily accurate rubber masks repping Winston Churchill, Frank Sinatra, Elvis Presley, Maurice Chevalier, and JFK.

Miss Van Doren's wardrobe is credited to Norman Norell and Bill Campbell, the masks devised by Bill Tuttle. Act was produced by Jack Brooks, with staging by Jack Baker.

Harry Nofal and Kay Brown sing the production numbers populated by the 15 George Arnold Dancers, and the entire show is ably cut by the Jack Cathcart orch (13).

The Room at the Top, an upstairs adjunct of The Living Room, has become the audition centre for new talent in New York. The performers there are paid scale at least for one or two-week engagements, and two out of the four acts are changed weekly so there will be a constant new flow of acts into the room.

The spot has been open only briefly, and it seems ready to pay off under the policy. Manager Joe Goldsmith, through years of auditioning for the Living Room, has built up a catalog of talent which he is calling in for the brief engagements.

The current card is made up of performers who are on the second time around, and want another try with another viewpoint or a different act.

Johnny Hartman, for example, is, obviously a vet. However, he has developed a sound and a style, and seems to be ready for branching out in several directions including recordings. He has smart arrangements, which propel a strong sense of rhythm, as well as a proficiency at ballads. There are a lot of situations in which he would succeed.

The same applies to Dottie Reid who has also exhibited locally on previous occasions. She seems to have something new to sell, including a sensitivity which comes to the fore in "All Alone" as well as soft sell delivery that charms for excellent results. In addition, she is nicely endowed and has ingratiating arrangements.

In need of more grooming is Choo Choo Collins, a well-equipped blonde, who shows up fairly well, but needs correction in a lot of technical areas. She seems aware of what she wants to do, but doesn't express herself in the right terms.

The Artie Azenza Trio, with the leader at the piano, bass and drums, provides excellent backing, and the musical chores are shared by George Rios, a good voice who shows up well at guitar also.

Don Adams, Meg Myles, Al Foster Trio; $6 minimum.

This Greenwich Village cellar club is only a few months old but it has yet to make a dent in the nitery habits of that area. Biggest competition probably is coming from the established Bon Soir, on the same West 8th St., a formidable foe, but there's room on the street for Room At the Bottom.

A new publicity office (George and Bernie Bennett) has taken over and an upped advertising schedule is being planned so the buildup is apparently on its way. The talent is already there.

With comedian Don Adams and singer Meg Myles, room has a neat programming parlay if not the strongest marque lure. Both were hampered by a small but surprising impolite crowd at show caught Friday night (26) but they managed to pull through.

Adams got the better of the deal since he was able to draw tabler yocks from his sly but sure repertoire that's been showcased on several prominent tv'ers. No powerhouse palaverer he, but his verbal strokes are for the most part sure and solid. His "plane from Mexico," "space school," "women's intuition" and "football coach "bits are well conceived and build laughs via his easy flow.

Miss Myles, who's been displayed in Gotham recently via a date at the eastside Living Room, pushes hard to get her songbag across. It's unfortunate that she had to vie with a talkative table of stags directly in front of the stage but it's to her credit that she didn't let up because of it.

Her repertoire mixes up ballad and bounce to good effect and she song-sells with continual drive. Best in her bag are "I've Got a Lot of Living To Do," "Love Isn't Born It's Made," "Flings," and a dynamic "Bill Bailey." Al Foster's trio, which does some lively intermission work, gives her a fine accomp. She's got a big voice and is handsomely endowed in other departments as well. Gros.

Fairmont, S. F.

San Francisco, Jan. 19.

Louis Armstrong and His All-Stars (6), Ernie Heckscher Orch (10); $3-$3.50 cover.

Louis Armstrong and his All-Stars blow up a terrific storm to a packed house in the Fairmont's big Venetian Room and figure to do standout business throughout their run.

In this long (82 minutes) show, Armstrong, his band and his vocalist, Jewel Brown, do 20 numbers, most of them very familiar to even the most casual follower of jazz and/or pops music. Among the tunes are "When It's Sleepy Time Down South," Armstrong's own "Some Day," "Bucket's Got a Hole in It," "That's Jazz," a calypso-influenced "High Society," "I Get Ideas," "Yellow-dog Blues," "All of Me," "Georgia on My Mind" and Armstrong's own, inimitable versions of "Blueberry Hill" and "Mack the Knife."

There isn't a one that wouldn't be a showstopper with some other band—they're all deftly done, throughly professional and vastly entertaining.

Armstrong, for all his tremendous virtuosity, instrumental and vocal, lets the individual members of the band take long, fascinating solos. There are all excellent: clarinetist Joe Darensbourg on "Yellowdog," trombonist Trummy Young on a number of tunes including his own "Ain't Whatcha Do, It's the Way Thatcha Do It," drummer Danny Barcelona, pianist Billy Kyle on "Girl of My Dreams" and bassist Billy Cronk on "The Man In Love" simply clobber this audience. And any time a bass solo can grab a crowd, it's got to be good.

But Armstrong remains in control throughout, rolling his eyes, popping out a few funny anecdotes, growling his lovely scat vocals and even letting Miss Brown push him away from the mike for a little scat of her own on "Saints Go Marching In."

It's a masterful performance, and if it's a little pat from having been done so often before (for obviously Armstrong is not now a jazz experimentalist), it also gains from the talented sureness which this whole crew brings to the crowd.

This is show business polished to an extraordinarily high degree, and no one with a "class room" should be scared of its jazz label. The crowds dig and are delighted to pay for it.

Show runs through Feb. 7.

Stef.

Ash Grove, L. A.

Los Angeles, Jan. 24.

Miriam Makeba, Rene Heredia; $2.50 admission.

Two years ago only a handful applauded Miriam Makeba's first appearance here at Ciro's, Tuesday night (23) after two successful tours with Harry Belafonte, and exposure on some top tv shows, the African song stylist was greeted by the large, enthusiastic audience she deserves.

Singer has unusual dignity and amazing vocal control. Attacks are strong and immediate and diction perfect. Most exciting is her use of the native Xosa dialect, reflected with impact in the "Click Song" in which she uses a throat clicking only her people can do. Similarly, she does well with a Yiddish ballad, "Everybody's Girl But No One's Friend," a departure from earlier acts, and shows frenetic rhythms in two hunting songs.

Rene Heredia, flamenco guitarist-singer-dancer, supports with expert musicianship in classic style that is not as fiery or familiar as usual nitery fare in this medium. A student of Sabicas, he shows masculine qualities of intensity reflected in playing and singing, as well as footwork.

Like Miss Makeba, she also has a vocal gimmick in a strange clicking tongue sound similar to snapping fingers, a unique and effective means of sustaining and pinpointing rhythm. Essentially a concert artist, she easily fits the patronage of the Ash Grove, but would be a difficult sale in a less specialized spot.

Dale.

Living Room, Chi

Chicago, Jan. 22.

Jane Russell, Norman & Dean, Sam DiStefano Trio; $2.50 cover.

Dan Segal, owner of Living Rooms in Gotham and Chi (and with one skedded for San Francisco), came in early before the Jane Russell opening to make some changes in his operation here, all of which were heartily approved by the nitery press corps and the Rush St. rounders.

He's returned to male servitors (eliminating the "butlerettes"), has tossed out the comfortable but space-consuming couches, and has widened aisle space throughout the club. There's now more lebensraum in the Living Room without cutting down on the club's capacity.

So much for the accoutrements. Segal also appears to have a winner with his current bill of Miss Russell and the comedy team of Norman & Dean. Miss Russell has a solid Chi following as a result of her local personal appearances and club dates and through her work with WAIF, the Korean orphans organization.

Statuesque thrush has a nice direct approach to her songery, packing some 20 numbers into her 35-minute turn. High spots include a cheerful "Hooray For Love," a well-arranged medley of numbers associated with film stars with whom she has worked, a wry and bouncy version of "Who Wants To Fall In Love?," a smooth rendition of "Seems Like Old Times" and a torchy delivery of "You Go To My Head."

Show openers (Harvey) Norman & (Stan) Dean hit several moments of comedic brilliance, and generally acquit themselves as bright prospects for the comedy duo big-time. While mostly on the plus side, their current turn is uneven, with the pair occasionally straining for effects not achieved.

Dean is the facile and frenetic mugger of the duo, and Norman is an excellent counterfoil with a reputable singing voice. Niftiest bits include a takeoff on a method acting school, a breakup trumpet solo of "Cherry Pink" by Dean, and a wacky acting out of "Snow White."

Bill is in for three weeks.

Mor.

Eddys', K. C.

Kansas City, Jan. 25.

Billy Falbo, Doublemint Twins (2), The Continentals (4); $1.50-$2 cover.

Fourth time around for Billy Falbo in the Eddy establishment is one of his best. This time bill has the Doublemint Twins, Joan & Jayne Boyd, doubling with Falbo, and combo is a bright show in 55 minutes. Brunette twins, who often sing away on a selected variety of pop and standards, winding with a peppy medley of old faves for a fine hand to their 18 minutes.

It's almost request week with Falbo, as he's so well enough known here now that the patrons put in bids for the faves in his repertory. He paces his standard bits with line of stories and quips with the ringsiders, settles them down for his jibes at the song titles, his pantomine poker game, his French sculpture and vocal impressions. He builds to a strong close with his round of vocal imitations and his surefire closer, Jolson.

Quin.

B & B, Indpls

Indianapolis, Jan. 23.

Cathy Johnson, Bill Monte, Ray Olson, Lindsay Sapphire Dancers (6), Billy Moore Orch (6); $2 cover, 2-drink minimum.

Charley Burkett has launched a new "production" policy at his B & B with the current show, adding six Lindsay Sapphire Dancers, formerly at Beverly Mills, to his lineup for an indefinite stay. Their lively routines in bright costumes at start and finish gave opening performance a welcome flash of color. Ray Olson, who did smooth job as emcee and vocalist in production numbers, also has joined house staff.

Cathy Johnson's vocal specialty, "I'm Little But I'm Loud," in feature spot, tells only half the story. She has a personality that reaches out into the crowd and she registers in a wide variety of songs.

She ranges from a Jolson medley to "You'll Never Walk Alone," "Scarlet Ribbons" and "Bill Bailey" to "There's a Love Knot in My Lariat," with yodeling, displaying plenty of dramatic flair. Husband and accompanist Bill Monte gets a nice hand for his "Guitar Boogie" solo.

Billy Moore's house band gives show solid backing. Production format shows interesting growth possibilities. Customers seemed to like it.

Corb.

International, N.Y.

Ames Bros. (3), Will Gaines, Boots McKenna Line, Mike Durso & Aviles Orchs; $7 minimum.

Jack Silverman's plans for one of his top seasons has started with the engagement of The Ames Bros., who haven't appeared locally in some time. During this interval, the act has pared down from a quartet to a trio, the other frere having gone into business for himself as a single.

The boys individually have a set of fine voices with Joe displaying a huge and well-developed bass which helps provide a round and strong sound for this group. The act runs well, especially when they sing out. But with only three members instead of the accustomed four, they do not take the strong and sustained notes as frequently as they used to.

What they do have is well presented, albeit in the style of a few years back. At show caught, there was a difficult all-male party that must have upset the equilibrium of all the performers on the bill, but the Ames lads managed to come out ahead of them. However, under normal circumstances, the time they allotted to themselves was overlong. Nonetheless they pleased the assemblage.

The other performer is Will Gaines, a personable Negro tapster, who dances engagingly and has a nice line of chatter to go with his hoofing.

The Boots McKenna production holds up well and the Mike Durso band provides tiptop showbacknig. Aviles does the rhumbas.

Jose.

Freddie's, Mpls.

Minneapolis, Jan. 27.

Smothers Bros., Beverly Wright, Al Schumaker Trio; $2-$2.50 cover.

It's the first time in Minneapolis for the fast-rising Smothers Bros. In only their third year as a nitery act, the pair has attracted considerable attention through appearances on the Steve Allen and Jack Paar shows, and a nice crowd attended their precm here.

The tv exposure has also brought them plenty of bookings, this being their second since the Allen show folded. There may be a question, however, of how their low-key comedy will go in the more sophisticated spots around the country.

Smothers' chatter is pure corn, but their singing and playing are solid. They're at their best on such folk songs as "Marching to Praetoria" and "The Fox," and they get lotsa laffs with a hoked-up version of "Cowboy's Lament." Brothers poke fun at most of their selections, frequently adding a comic twist to the lyrics. Act lags, though, when the boys expostulate.

Their discourses, generally led by Tom Smothers, a Jose Jimenez-type sans accent, get a bit painful at times—like listennig to a bad stutterer. Pair would benefit from more singing and less ad lib gabbing.

Al Schumaker trio does a neat job on its few jazz offerings. Singer Beverly Wright, also on the bill, failed to make the opening when foul weather spoiled plane connections.

Smothers are in through Feb. 8 with Kismet Revue following for nine days.

Rees.

Crescendo, L. A.

Los Angeles, Jan. 24.

Joey Dee & the Starliters, The Limeliters; $2.50 cover plus two-drink minimum.

Limeliters make another appearance for Gene Norman to cobill with holdover Joey Dee & the Starliters, with show apparently designed to attract the young crowd but doing a pretty good job of reaching all ages.

Limeliters continue in same popular vein as usual, concentrating on pleasant informality and a touch of gregarious humor to bolster their fine musicianship. From musical view, "When I First Came to This Land" is perhaps top entry, though the vibrant spontaneity that makes them likeable is more evident in the delightful "Monk Song" and the rousing "Joy, Joy, Joy." Leader Lou Gottlieb gets in plenty of easy comedy patter that helps.

Dee and his group, including a sextette of twisters, work hard on a show that, ironically, gets more attention for the floor than for the stage. Music is loud and rhythmic and, while it may be a big bore at first, becomes greatly infectious. Patrons soon lose their inhibitions and end up twisting themselves.

Dee looks like a little boy and he's got the energy of youth. His musicians are older, for the most part, and vets of rhythm & blues. "Hey, Let's Twist" and "Rolly Polly," from their Paramount film, are solid entries, while "Exodus" in swing is fine.

Show is in through Feb. 11.

Jazz Gallery, N. Y.

Charley Mingus Quintet, Olatunji's Drums of Passion; $1.50 cover.

This Jazz Gallery date is the first New York booking for bassist-composer Charlie Mingus after a Coast swing, and the California sunshine must have done the group some good. Current sextet, with Mingus on piano most the time, is swinging and relaxed—right down to an unusual two-beat wind for the progressive quint—a very funny parody of a Jellyroll Morton number that sounds great despite the antics.

Best of set, however, are the Mingus originals, which are highly imaginative modern jumpers in the main that give the sidemen a real chance for virtuosity and brilliant ensemble work. Besides Mingus, quint includes Herman Wright on bass, Booker Ervin on tenor sax, Richard Williams on trumpet and Danny Richmond on drums.

Billed with Mingus is Michael Babatunde Olatunji, Nigerian drummer, whose group of exciting African drummers have been assayed in these pages recently. Olatunji was slated to bring in six of his dancers for the weekends of this two-week date, which, if it happens, would be a entertainment bonus for sure.

Walker Hotel, Toronto

Toronto, Jan. 23.

Just back from a six-months' tour of Britain, France and West Germany preceded by the Hilton chain in the U.S., the blond and sexy Meg O'Shaughnessy is making her first Toronto visit in two years. This time, it's at the posh Franz Josef Room at the Walker Hotel.

Opening offstage with "I Got a Right to Sing the Blues" in low-down torch style, Miss O'Shaughnessy then makes her entrance with a bouncy "Them There Eyes." Decorative thrush belts out "Hard-hearted Hannah" in comedy style, and switches tempo to the sad songs of "But Not for Me" and "Second Time Around," complete with whispering lyrics.

All arrangements in her 30-minute stint are by Ralph Sharon, who is Tony Bennett's conductor. Songstress is attired in a mauve sheath, with matching slippers and elbow-length white gloves.

Former fronter with such bands as Eddy Howard, Clyde McCoy, Freddy Martin and the late Henry Busse, Miss O'Shaughnessy gains immediate attention of the Franz Josef Room customers with her alternating powerful and whispering styles of salesmanship, and is a welcome change from foreign-language chantoosies.

Miss O'Shaughnessy, who has an MGM album out in March—tagged "Meg Sings and Swings"— is an asset to any room. The Amaro Quartet gives strong support in her difficult breakaway orchestrations.

Act is in until Feb. 3.

Crown Room, Indpls.

Indianapolis, Jan. 26.

Tony Bennett, Steve Rose Orch (12); $3.50 cover.

Tony Bennett had full house for his first nightclub date here and scored solidly in hour-long stint in front of augmented band that played his tricky arrangements expertly.

Starting with formality, he soon takes off his tie, his double-breasted dinnerjacket, rolls up his sleeves and goes to work on at least 20 songs, alternating sock and slow numbers.

The customers react warmly to numbers with full orchestral backing and hang on every word when he sings in more intimate vein with only piano and bass accompaniment. "I'm So Tall in the Eyes of My Love", "That Old Black Magic" and "Funny Valentine" come off in great style.

Engagement for 10 days, closing Feb. 3.

Hotel Plaza, N.Y.

Johnny Desmond with Earl Syndore; Emil Coleman and Mark Monte Orchs; $4 cover.

It's been some years since Johnny Desmond displayed locally. With this Persian Room engagement, he indicates that it was a mistake to steer clear of Gotham during this period. Desmond is a singer of taste and talent who has come in with one of the most carefully produced and arranged acts written for a male singer.

It's a well-designed song turn figured to show many facets of his craftsmanship. The hotel's managing director, Neal Lang, of late has been eyeing the long shots, and they've been paying off artistically. He's providing a new set of names in this posh Persian Room, and with it comes an upbeat of interest.

Desmond has a slight thread of a plot to assist him. He starts off his turn mourning a love, but a telephone call brings him out of the depths into a bright and upbeat mood which has the customers sailing with him.

It's an act that's gimmicked up a bit. There's a clock to denote the passage of time and there's a Negro valet to bring Desmond the phone, share in his joys and help him sustain a mood. There's also a large amount of stagecraft to help him along.

The formal part of the turn is obviously the best of the evening. However, in the latter part when he starts doodling with the tunes, he indulges perhaps in a little more gab than is necessary which tends to slow up the act. But, there is nothing wrong that tighter editing wouldn't cure.

On the basis of this engagement, there seem to be new horizons for this singer who has been identified with the World War II crop. But there's nothing he offers that doesn't meet the top standards of present audiences. He's swinging with the times and the crowds dig him.

The valet is played engagingly by Earl Syndore. He is only one of the extras Desmond has brought along. His act is a product of special conductors, arrangers and lighting design. But it all pays off giving Desmond a unique facade with which to make himself known to Manhattanites again.

The Emil Coleman band provides the backing as well as dance music and Monte's Continental's do the picturesque relief.

Monte Carlo, M. B.

Miami Beach, Jan. 27.

"Land Of Milk & Honey" presented by Jacob Baal-Teshuva & Bernard Cohen. Stars Shoshana Damari, with the Sabra Dancers (6), Will Cooper, Eddie Greene Orch; $3.50 minimum.

Dynamic Shoshana Damari is the bright and aud-attracting reason for this longterm-booked revue that reopened the long-shuttered nitery in this north Beach hotel. The package is obviously one that will find considerable patronage among the winter tourists and large permanent population. It's paying off for the presenters since preeming during the year-end holidays.

Miss Damari is a solo artist of considerable depth in terms of vocal ability and range of selections. Natch, she hits the peaks with her wide range of Israeli tunes that include haunting ballads as well as driving climactic numbers such as those already popularized by stateside songsters. In her dramatic delivery they're authentic and come up with mitt-raising impact. She shrewdly balances the native aura with international familiars, including the American, to add up as a one-woman show.

The Sabra dancers, a mixed group add another authentic note to the Israeli theme. They too, play up the new state's native song-dances, both of the gay and the modern-ballet type that remind of a "West Side Story" in the choreography. Even toss in the folk-dances of this country to leaven out a lively and attention-holding turn.

Will Cooper is an amiable emcee who, in his own turn sparks a solid measure of laughs via mixture of original and borscht-belt derived one-liners and special material. Eddie Greene, a vet batoneer around these parts, backs the show skillfully.

Package runs through mid-February, with options.

dispatched to Chairman Wilbur W. Mills (D-Ark.) last week on the eve of his House Ways and Means Committee's renewed consideration of the controversial JFK tax proposals.

Voicing the fear that 200,000 jobs in the nitery and allied fields will be endangered by the expense account crackdown, the memo was signed by reps of these groups:

American Federation of Musicians, Hotel & Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union, American Federation of Television & Radio Artists, American Guild of Musical Artists, Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents & Managers, American Hotel Assn., International Assn. of Convention Bureaus, American Motor Motel Assn., National Licensed Beverage Assn., Food Service Executives Assn., N.Y. Committee for Promotion of Entertainment Industry, Restaurant League of N.Y. and the National Restaurant Assn.

The memo to Mills averred: "More than $500,000,000 in annual wages and over 200,000 jobs are jeopardized by the Ways and Means preliminary proposal. Existing law serves to control expense account tax abuses, especially now that the Revenue Service has increased its field staff and installed modern data processing equipment."

If new legislation is deemed necessary, the memo urged consideration of proposals of a less drastic nature.

Acting & Anatomy

ticularly in her home country, Miss Martinelli had problems because she was not from the mold of outstanding bust development.

"When I started in Italy it was quite difficult for me to get roles," she recalled. "It was five years ago, the time of the very bosomy girls. And I always have been skinny. Now it's changed. If people like the picture, they'll accept the girl. That's why I think directors are more important than stars."

Considering the flock of Italian actresses who were introduced on the strength of their shapes, Miss Martinelli said: "Many made 20 pictures in two years and I know you don't know them. If you prove you are a good actress instead of just having a good figure, you might work more years. That is why even such big stars as Sophia Loren and Gina Lollobrigida would like to be good actresses rather than just sexy."

"I think Gina will always be placed in sexy parts. That is what she does best," Miss Martinelli added.

Having just completed "The Pigeons that Took Rome" opposite Charlton Heston and, prior to that, spending seven months in Africa and Hollywood making "Hatari" with John Wayne and Red Buttons, both for Paramount, Miss Martinelli apparently has made the grade.

House Reviews

Apollo, N. Y.

Brook Benton, Maxine Brown, Willie Lewis, Marcels (4), Shep & the Limelights (3), Reuben Phillips Orch (13); "Rx Murder" (20th-Fox).

Current Harlem vaudery bill headlines Brook Benton, an established hit disker who is developing into a first-class stage and club performer.

The deep-voiced, easy-going balladeer has gained in confidence since last caught at this location a few months ago, and the turn has more sophistication, warmth and excitement.

Like other headliners here who have made it, Benton takes a chance with some of the classier numbers in the catalog and gets away with it. His openers are standards, "Secret Love," "I Didn't Know What Time It Was," and "I Could Write a Book," done in a tasteful style that would go anywhere. He moves into a sock current disclick, "Revenge," and winds with the familiar (to this aud, anyhow) impressions of Cole, Cook and Domino as they would do his bestseller, "Boll Weevil." It's a varied and well-paced act.

Blues-gospel style singer Maxine Brown, a regular here, is in top form and at show caught pulled an unusual second encore. Provocatively gowned in a tight, bright pink floor-sweeper, the slender belter injects a lot of dramatic meaning into a bluesy book that is lyrically far superior to the going r&r stuff.

Willie Lewis, a sort of hip Jim Crow comedian, has always commanded solid returns from the Apollo aud, and he has polished up the act without losing touch. Some of the old flamboyance is gone in a move toward the Nipsy Russell-Dick Gregory school (a Faubus cocktail, says Lewis, is a Black & White on Little Rocks).

The Marcels, bong-iti-bonging quartet, opens with a noisy and flat runoff of their r&r disclicks. It remains for the tin-eared teen set to judge how long the boys can get away with their antimusical antics. More class and aud sympathy is displayed by Shep & the Limelights, but then they are senior statesmen by r&r group standards (literally older, that is).

Reuben Phillips band is fine as usual in backing throughout.

Etoile, Paris

Paris, Jan. 24.

Andre Cherrier production of music hall show starring Fernand Raynaud; featuring Georges Reich Ballet (11), Michel Vocoret, Renee Caron, Rene Lafleur, Jack Perret, Jeannette Armand, Vautours (6); staged by Reich; sets and costumes, Francois Lalanne; music, Franck Barcellini, Marcel Rossi; $4 top.

Fernand Raynaud is a canny mime-patter comic who plays more to regular audiences than the highbrow crowd. He thus may have a neat run on this vaude-type show but not a hit status.

Dances and some acts surround Raynaud's sketches, patter and mime sequences. Overall show is sketchy, but Raynaud gets to the crowd.

Whether imitating a group of soldiers marching by miming all types, getting into scrapes with big people or mixing in with dances or other numbers, he displays a sure comic flair. But terp segments of the George Reich Ballet are only average. It has some invention and solid dancing. However, they're not of the calibre to raise this over vaude level. Thus show is a cross between straight two-a-day and a revue.

Other acts are also fail to give this the snap and spark it needs when Raynaud is not around. Jack Perrot plays tunes on his face and head, Rene Lafleur and Michel Vocoret are good skit foils, while Renee Caron does not have the projection to put over songs alone. Remaining turns are also disarmingly ordinary in their stints. Even a twist and r'n'r segment are dragged in.

WHISKEYHILL SINGERS
Songs
30 Mins.
Colonial, Toronto

Dave Guard, who quit the Kingston Trio last August, has assembled the Whiskeyhill Singers—three men and a girl—for a teeoff at the Colonial where twoweek engagement is billed as a world preem. As former composer-arranger for the Kingston Trio, his work for the newly-formed Whiskeyhill Singers acknowledges greater comedy values, particularly in his well-timed buildups to each number.

Guard scrupulously omits all references to the Kingston Trio in his performances.

Since his separation from the trio, Guard's task was to form a new group, for which he did extensive American travelling. Raiding the Kingston Trio ranks, he succeeded in luring Dave Wheat, former bass accompanist, now permitted to sing. Also in the new group are singer-instrumentalists Cyrus Faryar and Judy Henske.

After the breakin here, group does a series of one-night concerts at some 30 eastern colleges which will carry well into March. Whiskeyhill Singers (named for that San Francisco landmark) are on for their first club appearance at the Colonial and doing three shows nightly.

At show caught, quartet of three males and a fiery brunet did alternately bouncy harmonizing and slow balladeering, all to fine effect. Guard is lead singer and doing the arrangements.

Guard is generous in allowing step-out solos, with plenty of foot-stomping, funny lyrics and alternating swing style. Only serious ballad was "Deportee."

Group is packing in customers at 400-capacity Colonial.

McStay.

JACK ELLIOTT
Songs
42 Mins.
Le Hibou, Ottawa

Jack Elliott, chanter with guitar, has been around the circuits for some 10 years but seven of them were spent in Europe. Abroad, Elliott got big mileage out of the Europeans' liking of the American cowboy idea. Probably the closest he comes to a saddle is the bridge on his guitar. Despite this, he handles his items solidly and with an aura of authenticity. He warbles and plunks pleasantly, gabs with sharp wit and varies his offerings.

Stanza caught was too long, but he can slice if needed. Elliott already has a number of disks on both sides of the Atlantic. With good handling, he would work nicely in niteries and on tv or radio.

Gorm.

BEN YOST TRIO
Songs, Comedy
40 Mins.
Ho Ti, Portland, Ore.

Ben Yost singing groups have been on the board for years, but this engagement marks the preem of the Ben Yost Trio. New group sans tights, hip boots, capes, and swords a la Royal Guards appear in smartly tailored tuxes. High tenor Talmadge Russell and second tenor Orlin Witcraft combine talents with baritone bossman Ben Yost for a solid stint. The three work hard and sell the nifty vocal arrangements for hefty returns.

A good change of pace plus clean comedy material makes this a top drawer act. More rehearsals and exposure will eliminate the few rough spots. Lads display vocal talent in close harmony and know their way around. In this first outing, it's evident the Ben Yost Trio has major league possibilities for any situation. Best bets are "Unfinished Symphony," "Patty's Pig" and "Let There Be Peace." Trio has plenty of material, with two different 40-minute layouts.

Ind'pls Dark for Rest of Season As Both Local Managements Quit

Indianapolis, Jan. 30.

Legit has had setback in Indianapolis. Two local promoters who've been booking shows here this season have tossed in the towel. That leaves the city without any touring production prospects for the balance of the season.

Giving up at least for the present on the booking of legit shows here are Frank Lashinsky, president of National Attractions Inc., and Ross Christena, head of Ross Christens Associates Inc. The latter is primarily a talent agency.

Lashinky had been booking shows into the Murat Theatre, the town's principal showcase for road presentations. Christena's booking activities were confined to an engagement of "Thurber Carnival" at the Zaring Theatre and the American Ballet Theatre Co. at the Circle Theatre.

Both Lashinsky and Christena claim they quit because of high costs. Lashinsky, who's firm started booking the Murat last September, has cancelled all bookings made for the balance of the semester. He claims expenses connected with the bringing of touring shows to Indianapolis are much higher than any other city, including Chicago. He asserts that the stagehands Local No. 30 here charges double time Sundays, holidays and for work after midnight, as compared to time-and-a-half charged in Chicago, Cincinnati, Dayton, Louisville and other cities.

Of the shows booked by Lashinsky in the Murat this season, he says all but "Gypsy" lost money for his firm. His last booking at the Murat was "Best Man," which opened a split-week stand Christmas night. He says he'll resume booking productions into the Murat next season if local conditions became negotiable.

Christena claims he lost money on both "Thurber" and the ballet troupe. "Thurber," he states, called for 13 stagehands, but neither its scenery, which was not unloaded, nor its turntable could be used at the 1,000-seat Zaring, a converted film house. The stagehand bill, he says, was $535. Christena, noting

Pinochle Time

The omission of the standard overture in "Carnival" is apparently a source of confusion to some theatregoers. At a recent performance of the musical comedy at the Imperial Theatre, N.Y., a member of the audience was overheard explaining to his wife that it was probably the fault of the stagehands' union.

As he figured it, the introductory medley had been dropped to enable the performance, which "started late," to finish on schedule so that the stagehands wouldn't have to be paid overtime.

Will Do 'Oliver' On Coast First

Hollywood, Jan. 30.

The Los Angeles Civic Light Opera will present "Oliver," the musical version of "Oliver Twist" now in third year in London, in the upcoming 25th season, as a co-production with David Merrick, who holds the American rights. Merrick originally planned Broadway opening in early fall, but agreed to postpone until after the engagements here and in San Francisco.

Plans call for the London production and cast to be imported and also British director Peter Coe. English producer Donald Albery is associated with Merrick in the project.

NEW LEGIT RISING SOUTH OF CHICAGO

Chicago, Jan. 30.

Dorchester Club, a private country club in suburban Dolton, is constructing a permanent 1,200-seat theatre which is expected to be completed by June 15. Initially it's to be operated as a stock theatre in the summer and as a facility for trade shows and conventions in the fall-winter season. The summer theatre will, of course, be open to the public.

This represents the third new legit theatre that will be built on the southside of Chicago this year, the other being the 1,000-seat houses of Drury Lane and Palos Hills Supper Club, both of which should be completed early in 1963. It also stands to be the ninth new legit facility to go up in the metropolitan area in a period of slightly more than two years.

Along with the theatre, the Dorchester is building a motel on an adjacent 15-acre plot, which will contain a supper club.

Royal Shakespeare Co. Aims Showcase Project

London, Jan. 30.

The Royal Shakespeare Theatre Co. is to open an experimental wing for a term of six months to a year at the Arts Theatre, London. The project, to start in March, is to introduce new authors, producers and leads to the public by giving plays a four-week run.

According to Peter Hall, director of the company, other plans include the televising of two plays company's repertoire, following their "live" production. The group also plans to host the Apollo Society's monthly verse and music program at the Aldwych theatre, London, as the festival Hall is no longer available for that offering.

Hall estimates that in the two years it has been at the Aldwych it has played to 75% capacity. The stock company had grown from 15 to 36 members.

N.Y.C. Ballet to Albany

Albany, Jan. 30.

Fabian's Palace will present a one-niter Feb. 13 of the N.Y. City Ballet, at $1.95 to $4.30.

The theatre, which has an unusually large stage, played the Ballet Russe last season.

Film Distrib Nat Cohen Gets the Arts, London; To Keep It as Legiter

London, Jan. 30.

Nat Cohen is going legitimate. The boss of Anglo-Amalgamated Film Distributors, currently in the U.S., has made a personal deal for control of the Arts Theatre Club, and contracts for the sale of the remainder of the 11-year lease were agreed last week.

The news that Cohen was bidding for the club caused some stir in local legit circles, and resulted in counter-bids from some theatrical groups, anxious to preserve the Arts Theatre Club as an experimental centre. It has since been emphasized that there never had been any intention of turning the club into film operation.

Mrs. Gwellian Williams, principal director of the Arts Theatre Club, also confirmed that it was a private acquisition by Cohen, and was in no way associated with the film company of which he is managing director. She added that Cohen had no intention of forsaking the Arts Theatre's traditional dramatic policy, but intends to enhance it.

It's explained that the picture exec may occasionally show artistic films, but does not plan to alter the present policy of running the Arts as a theatre club.

Frisco Drive Succeeds In 'Matching' Ford Grant

San Francisco, Jan. 30.

Actor's Workshop, in a quick campaign, raised almost $23,000 in six weeks to bring 1961 total of contributions to $39,000, thus qualifying for $39,000 matching grant from Ford Foundation.

Workshop Managing Director Jules Irving said six-week drive brought in over 2,000 individual donations ranging from $1 to $5,000, and added money was received from all over California, New York and Canada.

Tower Theatre, Atlanta, Switching in Cinerama

The Tower Theatre, Atlanta, will be withdrawn next May 15 for touring legit bookings. It's understood the house is to be converted to a Cinerama Theatre.

The move will leave Atlanta with only the 5,000-seat Auditorium available for legit.

Griffith-Prince's $147,500 Dividend On 4 Old Shows

The production firm of Harold S. Prince and the late Robert E. Griffith made a combined profit distribution earlier this month of $147,500 on four of its past Broadway musical clicks. Represented in the payoff were "Pajama Game," "Damn Yankees," "West Side Story" and "Fiorello."

"Pajama" paid a dividend of $50,000, bringing the total distribution on the show thus far to $1,762,500 on a $250,000 investment. The "Yankees" distribution was $37,500, bringing the total divvy thus far to $1,037,500 on a $250,000 investment.

"Story" paid $30,000 for a total distribution thus far of $930,000 on a $300,000 investment, and "Fiorello" distributed $30,000 for a total divvy thus far of $390,000 on a $300,000 investment. The profit on the four shows is split equally between the backers and the management.

In the case of "Fiorello," which ended a 100-week Main Stem run last October, the Broadway production has been sharing in revenue earned by the C. Edwin Knill-Martin Tahse touring edition of the musical, which closed last Saturday night (27) in Philadelphia. "Fiorello," which opened on Broadway in November, 1959, was produced independently by Griffith & Prince.

Their first managerial effort, "Pajama," was co-produced with Frederick Brisson and registered a New York run of 133 weeks from May, 1954, to November, 1956. Griffith & Prince also co-produced "Yankees" with Brisson (in association with Albert B. Taylor). That musical put in 128 weeks on Broadway from May, 1955 to October, 1957.

"Story" was produced by arrangement with Roger L. Stevens. It opened in September, 1957 in New York and closed in June, 1959 after a run of 92 weeks. That count does not include a 32-week return engagement in New York in 1960 following a tour. The musicals, except for "Story," which was choreographed and directed by Jerome Robbins, were staged by George Abbott.

CRITICAL FELLOWSHIPS BY FORD FOUNDATION

Ford Foundation has awarded a fellowship for a critical and historical study of the Actors' Studio, N. Y. The study is being made by Gordon Rogoff, theatre critic and producer, as one of the recipients of the Foundation's third series of fellowships for studies in the creative arts.

The fellowships, in which the grants range from $2,150 to $7,500, are designed primarily to assist persons not regularly associated with academic institutions to undertake studies of potential significance to others interested in the creative arts. Some of the other fellowship recipients and the subjects of their research are as follows:

Boris Aronson, stage designer; a study of the development of the American theatre through an analysis of stage design.

Nathan Broder, musicologist and associate editor of The Musical Quarterly; completion of a history of the evolution of orchestral idiom.

David Flaherty, film director and writer; a catalog of Robert Flaherty's writings and photographs and a study guide of his films.

Edward N. Waters, assistant chief of the Music Division of the Library of Congress; a re-evaluation of Franz Liszt.

Applications for a fourth series of fellowships will be accepted by the Foundation next fall.

Off-B'way 'Premise' a D.C. Landslide After Trailing in First Returns

By LES CARPENTER

Washington, Jan. 30.

The original off-Broadway company has brought "The Premise" to Washington, and the improvizational revue registers here as a big entertainment hit with every sign of economic success.

The contract with the Shoreham Hotel, where two lobby floor rooms were merged and redecorated for it, calls for a 10-week run. The admission is $3, and drinks are served throughout the performance. There are 200 seats.

Washington has such an interest in politics that not much else matters. Director Theodore J. Flicker, who also is one of the four performers, learned immediately that he needs to discard almost everything not related to current events. Skits about psychiatric problems, for instance, may go great other places, but not here.

Flicker said he wanted to come to Washington because he wanted the challenge of an audience absorbed in politics. The challenge was apparently too much for him on opening night, where the VIP crowd included numerous political celebrities including Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson.

Flicker asked for an opening line from the crowd, Jack Bell, political writer for Associated Press, shouted, "Who is Mrs. Murphy?" The cast apparently hadn't heard of a Mrs. Murphy more recent than the one who found overalls tossed into her chowder. They acted out something about chowder, to the disappointment of the politicos. (Who is Mrs. Murphy?—Ed.)

There was a quick recovery,

Pat Title Parlay

Chicago, Jan. 30.

The show that will bring down the curtain on the Erlanger Theatre's 36 year history as a legit house next March is titled appropriately, "Bye Bye Birdie."

By another coincidence, "Do Re Mi," the musical that tonight (Tues.) initiates the McVickers as a legit theatre, contains a number titled "It's Legitimate."

'Lover,' 'Umbrella' Have 177G Loss

The collapse last week of the Main Stem presentation of "Complaisant Lover" and the Broadway-bound "Umbrella" represented a combined loss of around $177,000.

"Umbrella" tossed in the towel last Saturday night 27) (plus one regular performance and three previews) of a scheduled two-and-a-half weeks after one week tryout at the Locust Theatre, Philadelphia. "Lover" ended a 13-week run of regular performances Saturday at the Barrymore Theatre, but played an Actor's Fund benefit Sunday night (28).

"Umbrella," which had been slated to open Feb. 8 at the Morosco Theatre, N.Y., is figured to have dropped its entire $100,000 investment. The play, written by Bertrand Castelli in collaboration with Jack Raphael Guss and produced by Ketti Frings in association with Robert Evans, costarred Geraldine Page, Anthony Franciosa and Arthur O'Connell.

"Lover," capitalized at $125,000, had an estimated deficit of about $77,000 as of its closing. It's figured subsequent income from the sale of the stock and amateur rights will reduce that figure. There's also the possibility of a film deal bringing in additional coin. The Graham Greene play, in which Michael Redgrave, Googie Withers and Richard Johnson costarred, was produced by Irene Mayer Selznick in association with H. M. Tennent Ltd., Donald Albery and F.E.S. Plays Ltd.

ATLANTA MANAGEMENT HEADED BY SID DAVIS

Atlanta, Jan. 30.

Artist Productions Inc., made up of a group of Atlanta business and professional men, is the name of a new theatrical and concert booking organization headed up by Sidney Davis, promotion manager for Atlanta's Academy Theatre and the Southeastern Shakespeare Festival held at Emory University last summer.

Present plans call for presentation of at least 10 events during coming year. Two of major areas new outfit will exploit are folk music and jazz.

Arrangements have been made to kickoff bookings with concert presentation of Odetta, folk singer, in March.

To Offer French Plays For London Engagement

London, Jan. 30.

Michael Dorfman, having ended his partnership with Bernard Delfont, with whom he was associated on such ventures as the "Folies Bergere," enters management on his own with the presentation of a group of French plays, opening Feb. 19 at the Piccadilly Theatre and running five weeks.

The plays will include "Les Violons, Parfois . . ." by Francois Sagan; "Le Misanthrope," by Moliere; "Jean de la Lune," by Marchel Achard; "L'Invitation au Chateau," by Jean Anouilh; "L'Annonce Faite a Marie," by Paul Claudel.

"Physician for Fools," by American playwright Kenneth Cameron, is planned for February production by the Oldham Repertory Theatre in England.

Report Sardi May Open 3d Restaurant in M'pls.; He Says It's Nebulous

Minneapolis, Jan. 30.

Vincent Sardi Jr., who operates Sardi's and Sardi's East, in New York, may open a somewhat similar restaurant in Minneapolis. The project would be run in connection with the Tyrone Guthrie Theatre now under construction and scheduled for opening in the spring of 1963. As with the New York establishments, the restaurant would cater specially to legit patrons.

At the behest of former Broadway producer Oliver Rea, the Guthrie theatre's administrative director and now a Minneapolis resident, Sardi visited Minneapolis recently to make a survey of the city as a suitable location for a third class eatery. He says his accountants will make a detailed survey of the Twin Cities market to determine what prices could be charged, the volume potential, etc.

The noted restaurateur asserts that if he decides to open an establishment here, he himself will operate it, rather than franchise it to anyone else. He figures on financing the project in Minneapolis.

The Guthrie theatre is now under construction at a donated site and with local subscribed funds defraying all of the building costs. Guthrie is to head the repertory operation, with Douglas Campbell assisting and also being a member of the acting company.

Too Soon to Tell

Sardi said yesterday (Tues.) that he will meet this week in New York with a group of Minneapolis business men and, depending on their views, he will probably go ahead with a full-scale survey of the situation. He describes the project as vague at present, however.

As a preliminary to any other expansion of his restaurant business, Sardi revealed that he and several associates will soon open a dining room as part of a new motel in Greenwich, Conn. If that works out, he may be inclined to go ahead with the Minneapolis venture.

As a long-range proposition, Sardi says, his dream idea is to open a restaurant in London. That's admittedly just a gleam in his eye, as yet, however.

Singers: Eddie Becker, Theodore Brandon, Jean Bruno, Yettanda Enelow, Sam Greene, Linda Lavin, Gary Leatherman, Ripple Lewis, Alice Nunn, Kelli Scott, Maggie Task, Barbara Ann Walters.

Dancers: Tom Abbott, Robert Bishop, Charlene Carter, Jeremy Ives, Bob La Crosse, Carolsue Shaer, Judi West.

Songs: "Anything for You," "Beautiful," "My Son, the Lawyer," "Every Girl Wants to Get Married," "Right Girls," "Kalua Bay," "There's a Room in My House," "Siegel Marching Son," "Nathan Marching Song," "Harmony," "Now, Morris," "Wonderful Party," "Revenge," "Summer Is Over," "I'm Worse Than Anybody," "What I Say Goes," "The Wedding."

What's so funny about the quarrels of the bride's and groom's families over the wedding arrangements? It's an unedifying subject. However, it's the basis of the musical comedy, "A Family Affair," which opened last Saturday night (27) at the Billy Rose Theatre. The audience apparently reveled in it.

The show opens with the boy, at one side of the stage, asking the girl, "Will you marry me?" She answers, "Yes." Thereafter, until the wedding ceremony which finally brings down the curtain, there's not so much a story as a series of caricature complications, all involving the selfish, arrogant, unscrupulous (the groom-to-be ultimately mentions those and a dozen or so other distasteful adjectives, all deserved) respective families.

There no doubt are families like these, but who wants to spend an evening with them—particularly at Broadway boxoffice prices? On the other hand, "A Family Affair" is evidently a nudge-of-recognition show, with special appeal for anyone who, at least vicariously, is entertained by domestic quarrels. In this instance, it's primarily a Jewish show, with Jewish characters, numerous Jewish references and a sprinkling of Yiddish words.

There may be a limited public for the musical, notably as a theatre party item. It seems a questionable prospect to pay off, however, and there's not much in it for the road or films, and little for stock productions.

Presumably Shelley Berman, as first costar and male lead, has a personal following. Also, it remains to be seen how much response there will be to the intensive spot campaign began on local stations the day after the opening.

Aside from its dubious characters and situations, "A Family Affair" doesn't offer much. The music, at least on the basis of a first hearing, seems commonplace, and in most cases inadequately sung.

The acting tends to be exaggerated, the dancing is unimpressive and the physical production is visually unattractive. There is merit, however, in the consistent striving for originality in presentation—in short, credit for effort.

Presumably the basic idea of the show is true enough to life. The boy and girl decide to marry, and even agree on the approximate date, that's it's to be a fairly small wedding and on where they'll honeymoon. Then her guardian-uncle (she's an orphan) and his parents quickly take over, and preparations for the theoretically happy event are presently snarled in conflicting wishes, jealousies, vanities, spite and finally nonspeaking.

Obviously, it's all not meant to be taken seriously, but just laughed off. So it's a matter of identification, or of taste.

To some extent because of the generally poor singing, it's hard to tell about the music. "Anything for You," sung by the boy and girl immediately after the proposal, and "Every Girl Wants to Get Married," by the bride-to-be and a girl acquaintance, are passable ballads, though unmemorable. "Right Girls," done by Berman and a male chorus in a gymnasium, is an acceptable number, chiefly due to the novel staging.

"Kalua Bay," a duo song and dance by costar Eileen Heckart and top-featured Morris Carnovsky, is a fair spoof of Hawaiian tunes, but suffers in performance. "Summer Is Over," a lament sung by Miss Heckart, suggests wistful possibilities if done by a professional singer.

Bibi Osterwald puts zing into a satiric first-act finale, "Harmony," Berman makes a solo comedy turn, with plenty of mugging, of "Revenge." Larry Kert is at least loud in the next-to-closing cry of the dominated male, "What I Say Goes."

The dances are apparently supposed to stress originality and humor rather than choreographic quality, and on that basis they're good enough, though not outstanding. The overall direction of Harold Prince, a onetime stage manager and now a producer making his bow as a stager, having taken over the assignment during the tryout tour, seems to be competent.

Berman, a television and cabaret name, plays the girl's uncle, giving it a somewhat wry flavor, commendable authority and a good deal of writhing and grimacing. His first-nighter public voluably relished it. Miss Heckart, an established legit actress, seems miscast as the bridegroom's possessive, domineering, uncrupulous mother, and she has neither the voice nor the knack for putting over a song.

Carnovsky, a dramatic actor making his first appearance in a musical, is believable as the boy's overly patient father, and although he can't sing, he at least gets through a number without inflicting undue discomfort out front.

Kert seems almost anemic as the self-contained bridegroom, but comes to life briefly in production dance number in the second half. Rita Gardner is personable as the girl, despite unbecoming gowns, and Miss Osterwald, Paula Trueman, Jack de Lon, Lulu Bates and Cathryn Damon are notable in small featured roles.

As is frequently the case with Broadway musicals these days, there are a number of featured performers who are not readily identifiable in the show and whom the management doesn't even bother to capsule bio in the back of the program. The scenery by David Hays seems cluttered and grubby, and the costumes by Robert Fletcher are, with few exceptions, unusually ugly.

The important thing about a wedding, when it's all over, is that it has taken place—compared to that, the complications tend to be incidental. In the case of "A Family Affair," the incidentals are tedious. Hobe.

MET OPERA PRICED OUT OF TORONTO

Toronto, Jan. 30.

Rotary Club has decided not to bring the Metropolitan Opera Co. to Toronto next May because of costs of the engagement which left only $6,200 for Rotary's charity donation last year.

Fruitless discussions were followed by decision of Rotary and O'Keefe Centre that, even playing to capacity audiences at the same prices as last season, Rotary's surplus would not only be negligible but O'Keefe's would suffer heavy losses.

(Last season, top at O'Keefe's was $12.50 but there was some $20,000 paid out in refunds, under Toronto's liberal policy regarding such.)

Operating costs have risen $100,000 since Met was engaged nine seasons ago for Toronto visit, according to Tudor Davies, Rotary prexy. Hugh Walker, managing director of the 3,211-seat O'Keefe, referred to the "appalling cost of opera," with Maple Leaf Gardens management saying that "Metropolitan will definitely not play here."

(Rotary left the Gardens last season to move into the O'Keefe Centre.)

With deals arranged privately between Rotary and the Met, figures were not released but cost of week's Toronto visit would be about $200,000.

Meanwhile, Met will spend four days in Chicago after closing there, with company to pay idle members for recently-granted union demands which, say spokesmen here, have priced the Met out of the Toronto market.

Maybe Daring—Hardly Amusing

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

In the Jan. 17 issue, VARIETY printed a report of a television program on which Constance Bennett appeared in Chicago. VARIETY quoted Miss Bennett as attacking "Toys in the Attic" while starring in the play. Miss Bennett denied the story to me, and to VARIETY by telegram.

The day following her denial, Jan. 18, she repeated the attack in the Chicago-American. I have today seen a stenographic report of the tape and VARIETY's report is accurate. Miss Bennett's denial, therefore, is as puzzling as it is daring, but then there is much that is puzzling about Miss Bennett.

The facts are that in August, 1961, I offered the part of Albertine Prine — a part played brilliantly on Broadway by Irene Worth—to Miss Bennett with the proviso that she come in and read the part for Miss Hellman and me. (That was necessary, I thought, because Miss Bennett has seldom appeared in New York and I had never seen her on the road.) She not only consented to read, but was eager to read, an unusual situation for a star.

I engaged Miss Bennett for the part and signed a contract paying her $2,500 a week against 10% of the gross. Very shortly after rehearsals had started, Arthur Penn, Miss Hellman and I knew that we had made a mistake. (I think Miss Bennett knew it, too.)

But a bargain is a bargain, relations were most pleasant, and I consoled myself with the belief that Miss Bennett would draw money on the road.

That consolation did not last long. "Toys in the Attic," a distinguished play, winner of the N.Y. Drama Critics' Circle Award, began to have the now usual difficulties of a serious play on the road. Nobody blames anybody else for such troubles. Or nobody other than Miss Bennett. I am convinced that when Miss Bennett reached Chicago she decided that an attack on the play would explain her own lack of drawing power.

There is something profoundly distasteful about a lady who tries very hard to get a job, is paid an enormous salary for doing the job and then allows herself to attack the play while still in it. Certainly freedom of speech implies a little honor and should imply a little sense.

Miss Bennett's sharp words were obviously made with an eye to her own future. Frankness in ladies is now considered both daring and amusing, and television interviewers enjoy leading them on.

While Miss Bennett's critical opinions are hard for me to take seriously, they have reached a large audience through television and newspapers and, therefore, I consider them damaging to my play and reserve the right to take whatever action my lawyers advise.

In dramatizing the Lael Tucker Wertenbaker novel, "The Death of a Man," Garson Kanin, has made an ambitious attempt to chronicle the fading months of a man who has heard his death warrant issued by a surgeon friend who finds his cancer inoperable. The playwright has succeeded to the extent that his combination of dialog and action tells a graphic tale of what one man encounters in such a situation. However, the result is somewhat unsatisfying, even frustrating, to an audience that might reasonably hope for something beneficient and inspiring from the travail that marks the central character's "Gift of Time."

The play's title concerns the period between the awareness that his days are numbered and the actual moment of his demise, and there is an early implication that something outstanding will develop in the man's life, perhaps the finding of religion, or maybe some worthwhile service to his fellow man. Nothing specific of this nature materializes, however, and the entire script shapes up as a long "Camille"—like sequence as the disease gradually takes its toll.

There is unquestionably authenticity to the increasingly grim picture, but it is this very factor that may hurt the play's chances of popular acceptance. As a compensating element, the script offers a warm story of the love between a man and a woman that finds its deepest expression under the most trying circumstances.

Henry Fonda gives a skillful interpretation of the doomed husband and father. His underplaying of what could be an overly-dramatized role is noteworthy. Olivia de Havilland makes an excellent vis-a-vis as the sometimes distraught but always courageous wife who sees him through his torment. Their playing together constitutes a fine combination. The other roles in the sizable cast are largely incidental.

Boris Aronson has contrived an interesting series of atmospheric settings mounted in multiple units on double turntables and pinpointed for action via the lighting effects by Jean Rosenthal. The Edith Lutyens Bel Geddes costumes are in the 1954-55 era.

Kanin's staging is expert within the play's mood. Highlights of humor and drama are accomplished without resorting to overemphasis and a neatly modulated pace is maintained. Bone.

From Paris With Love

Toronto, Jan. 23.

Herb Rogers presentation of revue in two acts (26 numbers), by Don Driver. Staged by the author; musical direction, Milton Kraus; orchestrations, Gershon Kingsley. Stars Genevieve; features Luc Poret, Danny Carroll, Norma Doggett, Gus Viseur, Art Merrill. Opened Jan. 22, '62, at the Royal Alexandra Theatre, Toronto; $5 top.

With Genevieve starring, this 26-scene revue tagged "From Paris with Love" could do no wrong and a capacity audience enthusiastically applauded the comedienne-singer's every number and monolog. It remains to be seen, however, if the star's tv devotees will sustain the lusty Parisienne performer across the country.

First-night customers were charmed by Genevieve's performance, although the show ran only two hours, minus a 15-minute intermission. It's still the star's old night club act, abetted by Luc Poret and Gus Viseur, augmented in the sketches by Art Merrill and the dancing Danny Carroll and Norma Doggett team. The revue format has been written and directed by Don Driver.

Gorgeously costumed, when she's not doing a Piaf in dowdy black, Genevieve lends a spicy attitude to her escapades, but the whole revue has been assembled on a shoestring and is approximately the sort of thing put on in church basements. The opening-night Toronto audience loved it, however, although the over-use of the French idiom proved a barrier. Throughout the revue is the running gag of the stagehands' union demands, this presumably serving as an excuse for lack of production values, but appearing not so funny as it progresses.

Poret as the guitar-playing singer does passably well. Ditto Viseur as the non-speaking accordion-player. But Danny Carroll and Norma Doggett contribute little in their choreography except, perhaps, in "The Scrubwomen" bit.

Genevieve stands out in her linguistic problems in the Washington Terminal scene, her first act finale of the paternal Parisian bistro, but fails in the oldtime vaudeville act of a pathetic violinist who thinks the audience applause is being gained by him while the mitting is going to a strip-teaser behind him.

But the star is outstanding in her delivery of "Hi Lilli," "When the World Was Young" and a medley of all the bouncy and melancholy songs using Paris in their titles, with a thumbs-down on the minstrel-scene finale, complete with a sleasy riverboat backdrop.

While Genevieve is the show, judging from applause, there is the look of coy amateurism about "From Paris with Love" and it seems questionable whether the Gallic gamin can carry it for an extended tour. McStay.

Rosey Brent will appear in "We Take the Town."

Road: 'Advise' Strong $53,130, Mpls.; 'Plume' $46,113, 'India' $25,641, Bost.; 'Best' $30,622, 'Aspern' 12½G, Philly

The road was generally satisfactory last week. There were a few clinkers, however, including the tryout fold in Philadelphia last Saturday night (27) of "The Umbrella." "No Strings," in the second week of its Detroit breakin, was again the top-grosser. Leading the straight play list was "Advise and Consent" in Minneapolis. Last Saturday marked the closing after a lengthy tour of "Fiorello."

In the split-week grosses below, receipts are projected when shows play guaranteed dates. Grosses are not reported on the bus-and-truck productions of "Best Man" and "Critic's Choice," which are confined mostly to subscription-only Broadway Theatre League engagements where there are no box-office sales.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout and RS indicates road show. Also, prices on touring shows include 10% Federal Tax and local tax, if any, but as on Broadway grosses are net: i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

SIERRAS INTO ROCKIES

When Colorado Presents 'Girl Of the Golden West'

Denver, Jan. 30.

Central City Opera House next summer will present two Puccini operas—"The Girl of the Golden West" and "La Boheme," the first of composer's works in the 31 seasons of the gulch company. Robert Merrill of the Met is returning to Colorado to stage "Golden West." Central City will continue its tradition of English language versions and the Italian libretto may be changed from the California Sierras to the Colorado Rockies.

Rick Ricketson Jr., who heads the Central City Opera House Assn., is trying to book Jean Kerr's Broadway comedy "Mary, Mary" as the festival's legit offering.

The Knacker's Yard

London, Jan. 17.

A.L.S. Presentations Ltd. presentation of comedy drama in three acts (seven scenes), by Johnny Speight. Staged by Alan Simpson; decor, Tony Carruthers; features Dermot Kelly, Maxwell Shaw. Opened Jan. 16, '62, at the Arts Theatre Club, London; $2.15 top.

Sophia ..... Marjie Lawrence
Ryder ..... Maxwell Shaw
Martin ..... Dermot Kelly
Policemen ..... Richard Klee, Brian Jackson

"The Knacker's Yard" is the first new play to come to the West End this year, and it is questionable whether it will be around for long. Not because it is a write-off, but largely because the many crudities in dialog and the frequent use of four-letter words would never get past the Lord Chamberlain to permit its transfer for a regular engagement outside this theatre club.

Johnny Speight, the author, has an infuriating flair for repetitive dialog. This is one of Pinter's trade-marks, but Pinter does it better. There is also a similarity in characterization, but again Speight has to take second place. There is, too, an Irish tramp who is far too reminiscent of one of the characters in Pinter's "The Caretaker."

Speight, however, succeeds in building up atmosphere, even if he does so under false pretenses. The setting for his three-acter is one of the sleaziest bed-sitting rooms to be seen on the London stage. There is a filthy gas cooker, litter all over the place, and not even a chair to sit on.

Against this background, Speight creates an air of mystery about the new lodger, who comes complete with an old fashioned phonograph, pin-ups for the wall, and a framed Union Jack with a portrait of the Queen as its centrepiece.

The newcomer also flashes a razor, so it is not unreasonable to assume that he might be the mysterious Jack the Ripper who has been slashing and killing girls in the locality. But it turns out that the anti-hero is nothing more than a psychopath who ends up by putting his head in a gas oven.

It doesn't look promising material for laughs, but Speight succeeds in developing many comedy situations. The opening scene, for example, when the stranger is being shown around his new abode by the slut, packs many laughs; and the exchanges between the stranger and the Irish down-and-out in the next room are strangely diverting.

Under Alan Simpson's astute direction there are excellent performances by Dermot Kelly as the tramp and Maxwell Shaw as the psychopath. When they are on stage together, the audience is witness to accomplished and perceptive performances. Marjie Lawrence shines in the smaller part and there are minor bits by Richard Klee and Brian Jackson as cops.

La Foire d'Empoigne et L'Orchestre

(Up for Grabs and The Orchestra)

Paris, Jan. 11.

Claude Sainval presentation of Jean Anouilh, dual-bill, comprising a one-act drama, "La Foire D'Empoigne," and comedy-concert, "L'Orchestre." Staged by the author and Roland Pietri; scenery and costumes, Jean-Denis Malcles. Stars Paul Meurisse; features, Henri Virlojeux, Antoine Fontaine, Madeleine Barbulee. Opened Jan. 10, '62, at the Comedie des Champs-Elysees, Paris; $3.50 top.

LA FOIRE D'EMPOIGNE

Napoleon, Louis XVIII ..... Paul Meurisse
Fouche ..... Henri Virloleux
Sergeant ..... Gabriel Gobin
Lieutenant ..... Antoine Fontaine
Soldier ..... Marius Balbinot
Marshall ..... Hubert Buthion
Blacas ..... Leo Peltier

L'ORCHESTRE

Patricia ..... Madeleine Barbulee
Pamela ..... Odile Mallet
Hortense ..... Dominique Davray
Suzanne ..... Edith Perrett
Eimeline ..... Nicole Vassel
Leona ..... Nicole Mannielo
Pianist ..... Henri Virloleux

Jean Anouilh, whose hit plays have several times been panned and whose works have turned out to be failures, may vindicate the critics with this new double-bill of long one-acters. The two plays have received good notices, but this time seem due for boxoffice success.

"La Foire D'Empoigne" ("Up for Grabs") runs 95 minutes and deals with Napoleon's 100-day return from Elba and his final defeat. It is mainly a witty look at historical characters, with the famous general a hammy character mainly interested in the impression he will make on history, while the restored King Louis XVIII is a wise, shrewd but doddering statesman. Both parts are played by the star, Paul Meurisse.

Anouilh's incisive dialog has contemporary relevance for Parisians, but the play is talky and somewhat esoteric for export.

The curtain-raiser, "L'Orchestre," ("The Orchestra") runs 50 minutes and gives the impression of having been pulled out of a trunk and updated. The plot, about an orchestra with a pianist as the only male, seems dated. The lines tend to be coarse rather than bawdy, and the bawdy flair sentiment seems false and foreign to the play's general tone.

The orchestra mimes old fashioned numbers, well arranged by Georges Van Parys, but the piece is overlong and only intermittently funny. The scenery and costumes by Jean-Denis Malcles are functional and appropriate, and playwright Anouilh and co-director Roland Pietri have staged unobtrusively.

As You Like It

London, Jan. 11.

Royal Shakespeare Theatre Co. revival of five-act comedy by William Shakespeare. Staged by Michael Elliott; decor, Richard Negri; music, George Hall. Features Vanessa Redgrave, Ian Bannen, Max Adrian, Patrick Wymark. Opened Jan. 10, '62, at the Aldwych Theatre, London; $3.50 top.

Orlando ..... Ian Bannen
Adam ..... Clifford Rose
Oliver ..... David Buck
Dennis ..... Bruce McKenzie
Charles ..... Sebastian Breaks
Rosalind ..... Vanessa Redgrave
Celia ..... Rosalind Knight
Touchstone ..... Patrick Wymark
Le Beau ..... Ian Richardson
Frederick ..... Tony Church
Banished Duke ..... Paul Hardwick
Corin ..... Russell Hunter
Silvius ..... Peter Gill
Jaques ..... Max Adrian
Audrey ..... Patsy Byrne
Sir Oliver Martext ..... William Wallis
Phebe ..... Jeanne Heppel
William ..... Richard Barr

Others: Gareth Morgan, Barry Stockwell, Michael Stephens, Eric Flynn, James Kerry, Susan Engel, Narissa Knights, Rosemary Mussell, Georgina Ward, Julian Battersby, Peter Holmes, Michael Murray, Ronald Scott-Dodd, Michael Warchus, Brian Wright.

Acclaimed at last year's Stratford-on-Avon season, this production has been moved into the repertory of the company's London theatre and repeats its triumph. The comedy is traditionally spotty, for its chief dramatic situation, is the non-recognition of Rosalind in her manly disguise by her besotted Orlando.

Even this flaw becomes a virtue in Michael Elliott's superlative direction, however. The staging brings out more facets of the play than are usually perceived, emphasizing the romantic irony at its core, and, helped by Richard Negri's evocatively sylvan set, bathes the whole proceedings in a fitting autumnal glow.

Within this framework, the performance of Vanessa Redgrave as the man-catching Rosalind is the focal point. Maybe too ecstatically girlish in her infatuation to start with, she grows in strength and subtley as the play proceeds. Her chief assets are an innate elation that set the character floating delightfully over its incongruities, a dignity that is all the more impressive in its occasional overthrow, and an unerring eye and ear for the right emotion. Although handicapped by her height—she's nearly six feet—the actress confirms her promise as the leader of her generation in the range of her responses.

Other contributions provide strong support. Patrick Wymark makes a superb Touchstone, infusing life into clowning that is too often arid. Ian Bannen is a sturdy foil to the heroine as Orlando, making a virtue of his incredible obtuseness in the play.

Rosalind Knight makes much of Celia, Rosalind's crony, although inclined to bring over-modern intonations to her dialog. Max Adrian, too, is fine as the melancholy Jaques, gently drawing the absurdity out of the "ages of man" speech without destroying its dramatic impact. David Buck, Patsy Byrne, Jeanne Hepple, Tony Church, and Peter Gill shine in support.

The production has been slotted in for an unlimited engagement in the repertory.

Greater Seattle Group Has Earned $55,648 Net In 11½ Years' Operation

Seattle, Jan. 30.

Greater Seattle Inc. has earned a profit of $55,648 in 11½ years' operation of its legittuner presentations at the 5,500-seat Aqua Theatre here. That was reported by Dallas Donnan, president of the civic promotion organization, at the corporation's recent annual meeting in the Olympic Hotel here.

It was revealed at the session that last season's two show's, "Oklahoma" and "Silk Stockings," netted $26,190. The combined outlay for the two offerings was $76,231. The combined gross was $102,421. "Oklahoma," in which John Raitt and Pamela Britton costarred, played five performances, while "Stockings," in which Jan Murray and Jan Sherwood costarred, played four performances.

Last summer's 16-performance run of "Aqua Follies" earned a profit of $32,595 on a gross of $210,094. Expenses relating to the presentation totaled $177,499. According to the annual report, the "Follies" has earned a profit of $327,614 in 11½ years. Greater Seattle had its most successful year in 1961 with a total profit of $92,685 from the musicals, the "Follies," memberships, Skipper Pin sales and miscellaneous events. The total income for the year was $813,904 against expenses of $721,219.

However, an accumulated loss of $84,594 reduced the surplus to $8,091 for the 11½-year period. The cumulative total income for the 11½ years was $6,636,516 against expenses of $6,628,425. The only losing event over the span of years, according to the annual report, has been the Seafair Unlimited Hydroplane Race, with a net loss thus far of $124,163.

Off-Broadway Reviews

Moon On A Rainbow Shawl

Kermit Bloomgarden & Harry Joe Brown Jr. presentation of a new three-act drama by Errol John. Staged by George Roy Hill; settings, Lloyd Burlingame; lighting, Jules Fisher; costumes, Charles Gelatt; sound, Gigi Cascio. Opened Jan. 15, '62, at East 11th St. Theatre, N.Y.; $4.80 top.

Cast: James Earl Jones, Robert Hill 2d, Kelly Marie Berry, Cicely Tyson, Michael Barton, Vinnette Carroll, Melvin Stewart, Ellen Holly, Gertrude Jannette, Ronald Mack, Bill Gunn, Robert Earl Jones, Peter Owens, Carolyn Strickland, Wayne Grice, Warren Berry.

Errol John's brawling new drama of life in a Port-of-Spain backyard took the long hard road to off-Broadway. Prior to its vivid reincarnation at the E. 11th St. Theatre, this vital slice-of-Trinidadian-life had been produced on stage, radio and television in London, published in several languages, staged in Holland, Surinan, Australia, Hungary and the Argentine.

To scripter John it may now seem worth the wait, however, for the rambunctious mounting in an ex-Albanian Hall just off lower 3rd Ave. is likely to make this section of the Bowery a beaten path for off-Broadway aficionados, theatre cognescenti, and anybody who just likes a good show.

John has convictions and sticks to them. His hero refuses to be lured into unwanted marriage by his inamorata's pregnancy, a vivacious prostitute flaunts to the world that she has no heart of gold, emotions are laid rawly bare.

Under George Roy Hill's unsparing direction, the actors probe deeply. Particularly impressive is James Earl Jones' portrait of a sturdy, handsome streetcar conductor who wants more from life than a woman and a better job.

Vinnette Carroll, as a longsuffering, poverty-stricken wife and mother, has passion and bitterness, Robert Earl Jones is touching as a defeated man who choses principle at his moment of truth, and Cicely Tyson is a perkily vixenish baggage who knows how to capitalize her quivering advantages.

Kelly Marie Berry is winsome as a talented youngster whose abilities may be sacrificed to a tragic enviroment, Bill Gunn is cheerfully extroverted as a young man who gives a gargantuan ring to the prostie, and Ellen Holly uses quiet and repose as a girl who loses her man.

Co-producer Kermit Bloomgarden is geographically a long way from his accustomed Broadway bailiwick but this lusty play should ave a relative kind of success that may make him feel right at home.

Who'll Save the Plowboy?

Phoenix Theatre, T. Edward Hambleton & Norris Houghton, managing directors, production of a new three-act drama by Frank D. Gilroy. Staged by Daniel Petrie; settings and costumes, Houghton; lighting, John Robertson. Opened Jan. 9, '62, at the Phoenix Theatre, N.Y.; $4.50 top.

Cast: Gerald O'Loughlin, Rebecca Darke, William Smithers, Tom Sawyer, Dorothy Peterson, Burton Mallory, Patrick O'Shaughnessy.

Expert staging by director Daniel Petrie and deep compassion for his characters by playwright Frank D. Gilroy give "Who'll Save the Plowboy?" a touching sense of theatrical truth. There is little to the story, however, that the pew-holder will take home from the theatre with him.

Gilroy's apprenticeship has been served in television. Except for a few explicitnesses and a gruesome revelation toward the play's and, there's little to distinguish "Plowboy" from good evening fare on the channels.

The dialog is spare and unyielding. Petrie has punctuated the play with bursts of anger, and Rebecca Darke, as a phlegmatic, complaining, philandering wife has a tightlipped female acidity that could frighten anybody who had encountered it outside the theatre.

Gilroy's story, however, of a man who must be repetitively saved by sacrifice of his friends, gets lost between lightness and despair. Without Petrie's incisively revealing direction "Plowboy" might easily be just another of those off-Broadway evenings that revel only in promise.

William Smithers is strong, handsome and forbearing as, in Gilroy's allegorical terms, a Christ-like figure, Gerald O'Loughlin is swaggering, whining and desperate as an ordinary guy who has no idea he's ordinary, while Dorothy Peterson is svelte as a grand dame who recognizes lovelessness at sight.

The Phoenix Theatre's contribution is the uncovering of a new playwright whose facility with ascetic dialog and character portrayal could bear watching.

A Stage Affair

Barry C. Tuttle revival of comedy-drama in two acts, by Paul Crabtree. Staged by the author; music, Will Irwin; scenery and lighting, B. Tuttle; costumes, Ann Silverman; assistant producer, John Ben Tarver. Features Carleton Carpenter, Louise King, Maryann Gudzin, Richard Higgs, Tom Pedi. Opened Jan. 16, '61, at the Cherry Lane Theatre, N.Y.; $3.90 top weekdays, $4.50 weekends.

Cast: Tom Pedi, Carleton Carpenter, Louise King, Maryann Gudzin, Richard Higgs.

"A Stage Affair," a revival of a 1950 Broadway flop, then titled "A Story for a Sunday Evening," should have been allowed to rest in peace. The central character of the tedious piece is a young playwright who has rented the theatre for the night and has invited friends to watch scenes from a script he is writing. Stagehands move about, the actors are introduced and the stage manager receives his instructions.

The unfinished drama deals with the playwright's relationships with his sweet but practical wife and his home-wrecking sweetheart. He has persuaded them to play the parts, and they interrupt their scenes to bicker and argue.

The play-within-a-play device is annoying, and swamps the slight story. There are only one or two touching moments, as when Carleton Carpenter as the playwright and Maryann Gudzin as his wife move into their new apartment on their wedding night. Louise King plays the other woman well, but the characters are inconsequential.

A pleasant exception to the general glumness is Tom Pedi as the disgruntled stage-manager. In one scene depicting a cocktail party, hat-racks and window dummies are used to represent people. Pedi runs from one to another, reading all the lines. His sarcastic performance makes the sequence amusing.

Barry Tuttle's sets and Ann Silverman's costumes are appropriate, and Paul Crabtree's staging of his own play is often inventive. But the affair on stage is dull.

The Cantilevered Terrace

Geoffrey Jones & Albert Penn (in association with Morton Zolotow) presentation of a two-act drama, by William Archibald; staged by the author; scenery, costumes, and lighting by Paul Morrison; assistant to the director, Janine Manatis. Stars Mildred Dunnock. Opened Jan. 17, '62, at the 41st Street Theatre, N.Y.; $4.60 top weekdays, $4.90 Fridays and Saturdays.

Cast: Colgate Salsbury, John Harkins, Marcie Hubert, Don McHenry, Mildred Dunnock, Fran Bennett.

In the opening minutes of "The Cantilevered Terrace," a nice young man reveals that he wants to murder his father and mother. Since he doesn't have enough nerve, he persuades his sister's fiance to do it. Just before the final curtain, the second y.m. follows the parents offstage, presumably to push them over a cliff into the sea. In between these two moments there is a lot of fancy talk.

There's something about how to measure the circumference of love, and something else about the moon tip-toeing barefoot through the sky. There is a long soliloquy by Mildred Dunnock, as the mother, revealing her mixed feelings of love and hate for the others in her family.

There is lots more, mostly as dull as an advanced treatise on fancy needlework. The characters are never successful either as symbols or as human beings, and the attempts at poetry range from unoriginal to unintentionally funny.

The acting is good. Colgate Salsbury as the son, brings brooding intensity to his weak role. Miss Dunnock and Don McHenry are professional as the parents, and Marcie Hubert is attractive and wistful as the daughter.

Archibald has staged his own play with deliberate earnestness. The Paul Morrison setting about what might be expected.

Yale's Expanding Theatre Collection

Langner and Lieberson Honorary Curators — Much Musical Data Available

By HAROLD M. BONE

New Haven, Jan. 30.

Yale University's Sterling Memorial Library "Collection of American Literature" is an expanding trove of show business memorabilia. Items range from records pertaining to the history and growth of musicals to personal correspondence of theatrical greats and lesser lights.

Holding the custodial reins on the collection are James T. Babb, university librarian; John H. Ottemiller, associate university librarian; Donald C. Gallup, curator.

With no university-appropriated funds available, specific purchases has been provided by individuals. For example, Mrs. Eugene O'Neill provided funds for purchase of material to be added to the O'Neill collection. In addition, a group called the Yale Library Associates makes funds available for purchases on recommendation by librarian Babb. Many items have been acquired simply through personal contact, such as with family and friends of the late Dudley Nichols. Also bearing fruit have been invitations of Library inspection proffered to playwrights, directors, etc. (such as Tennessee Williams, Moss Hart, et al), who have come to the New Haven Shubert Theatre with their productions.

Despite expansion of its collection and contrary to an expressed possibility, Yale is not attempting to rival the N.Y. Public Library's accumulation of theatrical material. As a matter of fact, George Freedley of the Gotham institution has been vastly helpful in the buildup of the Eli musical theatre collection.

Theatre Guild & Musical Units

Pointing up the magnitude of the two largest segments of the Yale collection was the November naming of Lawrence Langner as honorary curator of the Theatre Guild Collection and Goddard Lieberson as honorary curator of the Yale Collection of the Literature of the American Musical Theatre.

The Theatre Guild Collection, largest unit, comprises complete records of the Guild since its founding. All of the financial records are included, together with several hundred volumes of scripts of some 170 plays produced by the Guild. Also, there are numerous unpublished scores and thousands of photos of various stages of Guild productions, as well as original designs of stage settings.

The Musical Theatre Collection, second largest group, which Lieberson oversees, is the outgrowth of an original 1954 Robert L. Barlow presentation of sheet music, programs, scores and recordings by original artists and casts, in toto some 5,000 items.

Lieberson has aided supplementation of the Barlow original by writing countless letters seeking material for placement at the Yale Library. His contacts have been fruitful in acquiring Harold Rome, Jerome Kern, Frank Loesser and similar "name" material. Irving Berlin submitted copies of everything he ever wrote. And Lieberson himself (president of Columbia Records since 1956) turned over copies of every Columbia recording having to do with the theatre.

Marquand, O'Neill, Et al.

Noteworthy is the manner in which various donors to the Yale collection have made their contributions. In numerous instances, the material has been complete; in other cases it has been a matter of passing different classifications on to different institutions. For example, while John P. Marquand gave all his literary manuscripts including the dramatized version of "The Late George Apley," to Yale, he presented his letters and other correspondence to Harvard. Similarly, Eugene O'Neill divided his manuscripts among Yale, Princeton and the N.Y. Public Library. The Yale portion, however, is said to be generally regarded as the best O'Neill collection in an institution.

Other entries in the Yale collection come from:

Archibald MacLeish — material on "J. B." prior to its production. Correspondence with director Elia Kazan relative to "J. B." Other manuscripts.

Stephen Vincent Benet — script of "The Devil and Daniel Webster."

Philip Barry — numerous drafts of plays and correspondence.

Robert Edmond Jones—material on his designing for "Mourning Becomes Electra" and "Moon for the Misbegotten" (included in the Eugene O'Neill collection).

Sinclair Lewis — many revised drafts of "Angela Is 22" and other manuscripts.

Arthur Miller — correspondence.

Theresa Helburn — correspondence, and material on producing plays.

Theodore Dreiser — manuscript of "An American Tragedy."

Robert Penn Warren — manuscripts donates and correspondence loaned.

Thornton Wilder — gift correspondence with Alexander Woollcott and the Lunts. Wilder currently maintains a filing cabinet at Yale for personal archives which he will probably present to the Library eventually.

Cole Porter, John Hersey, Langston Hughes, Eartha Kitt, William Inge, Clifford Odets, Harold Clurman—miscellany.

In addition to the foregoing specifics, there is the comprehensive Crawford Collection of Playbills and Photos and a voluminous photos, news items, programs and clipping bureau assembly of relevant material.

'Gideon' Recoups 50% of 150G Nut

"Gideon" had recouped 50% of its $150,000 investment as of Dec. 30, the end of its eighth week on Broadway. The Fred Coe-Arthur Cantor production earned an operating profit of $30,098 for the four weeks ending that date, on grosses ranging from $34,245 to $43,236. However, overall business for the Paddy Chayefsky play suffered a substantial decline during the ensuing four weeks ending last Saturday (27).

The drama, in which Fredric March and Douglas Campbell costar, is currently in its 13th week at the Plymouth Theatre. March gets 10% of the gross. Chayefsky's share of the gross is the basic Dramatists Guild minimum, 5% of the first $5,000, plus 7½% of the next $2,000 and 10% of the balance.

Director Tyrone Guthrie gets 2½% of the gross and the management gets 1%. The theatre's share of the gross is 30% of the first $20,000 and 25% of the balance.

The following reflects the financial condition of the show as of a Dec. 30 audit:

Repaid to investors, $30,000.
Unrecouped costs, $74,982.
Bonds and deposits, $19,396.
Balance for emergency fund, $25,622.

O'Neill Anthology

"O'Neill and His Plays," edited by Oscar Cargill, N. Bryllion Fagin and William J. Fisher (N.Y.U. Press; $7.50) is a collection of essays, critiques and reviews. Noteworthy contributors are Susan Glaspell, John V. A. Weaver, Edna Kenton, Maxwell Bodenheim, George Jean Nathan and Sean O'Casey. The late Mary Welch writes of acting O'Neill ("A Moon for the Misbegotten"), and Seymour Peck furnishes an interview with Carlotta Monterey (O'Neill's widow). Reviewers include Woollcott, Broun, Brown, Macgowan, Hammond, Nathan, Young, Eliot, Hutchens, Benchley, Gabriel, Anderson, Gilder, Atkinson and Clurman. There are pieces by Barrett Clark and George Pierce Baker. Virtually every authority on O'Neill is represented. Tome also contains a checklist of plays and production records.

In a promised flood of works about O'Neill, this is a useful reference work. Rodo.

Christian Play Sought

Rome, Jan. 30.

Pro Civitate Christiana, a Catholic organization at Assisi, will pay $1,000 prize money for a suitable stage play bearing the title, "Men Need Christ." Deadline is next May 1.

It is presumed author keeps performance rights and his royalty position, though that is not confirmed.

'Sunday' Has $76,328 to Make; Pic Sale to Help

"Sunday in New York" had unrecouped costs of $76,328 as of last Dec. 23, the end of its fourth week on Broadway. Generally meager business during the ensuing five weeks ending last Saturday (27) hasn't helped the financial condition of the show, on which the deficit was increased somewhat a few weeks by the cost of moving from the Cort Theatre to the Golden Theatre.

However, a substantial hunk of the coin still to be recovered on the David Merrick production, now in its 10th week in New York, will be forthcoming from the sale of the film rights to Seven Arts Productions. The deal on the Norman Krasna play is understood to involve a minimum payment by the picture company of $150,000. The Broadway production's 40% share, less 10% commissions, is $54,000.

Waivers on royalties, office expense and company and general manager salaries are put into effect when receipts are particularly lean. Such was the case for the week ending Dec. 23, when the comedy earned an operating profit of $372 on a $14,737 gross. Financial data on the show as of a Dec. 23 audit was as follows:

Investment, $125,000.
Production costs, $80,386.
Out-of-town profit for four weeks, $19,636.
Cost to open in New York, $60,749.
Quote advertising, $17,528.
N.Y. profit for four weeks, $1,949.
Unrecouped costs, $76,328.
Sinking fund, $20,000.
Balance available, $28,672.

MET OPERA UPS ALL: WEEKS, WORKS, PRICES

Managing director Rudolf Bing has disclosed some of the plans for next season. He is able apparently to set details and reveal them with confidence so far ahead because of the three-year contract with Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians, a condition of the recent arbitration award by U. S. Labor Secretary Arthur Goldberg.

The 78th season will open at the unprecedently early date of Oct. 15 with "Andrew Chenier" (Franco Corelli, Eileen Farrell, Robert Merrill; Fausto Cleva on the stick.)

New subscription series will be added on a staggered basis of three Mondays, two Thursdays, two Fridays and one Saturday matinee. Prices are going up to help cover what Bing describes as the $1,300,000 deficit implicit in the new contracts with 15 labor unions.

To cover the cost of new stagings the Met will have subsidy from Mrs. John D. Rockefeller Jr. ("Die Meistersinger"), the National Council of the Met and Mrs. Albert Lasker ("Otello"), Francis Goelet ("Ariadne & Naxos") and by the Metropolitan Guild two ("La Somnambula" and "Adriana Lecouvreur").

New singers set: Regine Crespin, Rita Gorr, Jess Thomas.

New conductors: Ernest Ansermet, Lorin Maazel.

Goulet Incorporates

Toronto, Jan. 30.

Robert Goulet, featured singer-actor in "Camelot," has formed a corporation with his manager Norman Rosemont, vice-president and business manager of Lerne-Loewe Productions Inc. The new setup is to produce shows starring Goulet.

The performer still owns 75% of himself.

Actor Equipped For Retaliation

Studs Terkel, With Own Radio Program, Able To Rebut Critic of His Play

Chicago, Jan. 30.

Critics should be wary of panning a production starring an actor with a radio show of his own on which to rebut. This would seem to be the lesson derived from an embroglio involving Chicago Daily News critic Sydney J. Harris and Studs Terkel, longtime Chi tv and radio personality and legit actor (and playwright), who has his own daily interview, music and comment show, "Wax Museum," on station WFMT.

Terkel utilized his show recently to lash back at Harris for the critic's review of the Goodman Theatre production of William Saroyan's "My Heart's In The Highlands," in which Terkel plays the lead. After praising the other half of the bill, Edward Albee's "The American Dream," Harris said: "'The American Dream' is provided (apparently a typo for "preceded") by a production of Saroyan's early play, 'My Heart's In The Highlands,' about which the less said the better. Eat late and arrive at the Goodman an hour after curtaintime, is this department's advice."

In answer to the review, Terkel editorialized on his program: "This is just not an actor answering a critic. He may have been well justified in lambasting the production or performances. He did not. In short, it was not a review, it was a non-review. It is the first time that I have heard boorish behavior on the part of playgoers encouraged by a critic." (The theatre reported "several" calls asking the time at which the second play was to go on.)

"I do not expect from Sydney Harris," Terkel continued on the air, "the understanding that I expect from Kenneth Tynan or Harold Clurman. No more than I would expect a student production of 'Hamlet' to match the Old Vic's. However, a rudimentary knowledge of theatrical history is in order: Saroyan's 'My Heart's In The Highlands,' as produced by the Group Theatre in 1939, received reviews similar to those that Albee's 'American Dream' garners today. That's why the Goodman bill of Saroyan and Albee is so fascinating. Each playwright has a vision of his own society and time—and what a difference a generation makes.

"Saroyan's gentle fantasy, written during the depression, saw a society of material poverty and spiritual riches. Albee, in 'American Dream,' one disillusioned generation later, sees a society of material wealth and spiritual poverty. For a respected critic to miss this point and flinly urge his readers to see one play and not the other, though they both be on the same bill, is appalling."

AUTHORS & COMPOSERS REGAIN PLAYHOUSE

Madrid, Jan. 30.

Teatro de la Zarzuela, Madrid's showcase for Spanish light opera, ballet and special musical stage mountings, is back in the hands of its original owners—The Society of Authors and Composers—after a long and bitter legal fight with ex-impresario (and symphony orchestra conductor) Mendoza Lassalle.

Lassalle, under a two year leasing arrangement, boldly attempted to resurrect the Zarzuela with lavish production values at popular prices. However, public support did not materialize and his administration faced serious financial difficulties which could not be surmounted even with government subsidies.

Temporarily, the Zarzuela will be administered by five executives of the local ASCAP organization which has already programmed a Flamenco spectacle under the title of "Arte Espanol" with "Philippine Holiday" scheduled for subsequent billing. In legit and musical circles, however, it is reported that Jose Tamayo (now directing the state-subsidized Espanol and his own Teatro de Bellas Artes) will also take over the Zarzuela and inaugurate his regime there with a Jose Lopez Rubio version of "The Merry Widow."

'Write a Murder' Due for London

British playwright Frederick Knott's "Write Me a Murder" is reversing the trans-Atlantic production pattern of his prior click, "Dial 'M' for Murder." The latter melodrama was first done in London and was subsequently presented on Broadway, whereas "Write Me" debuted in New York and is now scheduled for a West End edition.

"Write Me" is to be presented in London by Gilbert Miller and H. M. Tennent, Ltd., who've earmarked it for an April 9 opening at Miller's Lyric Theatre there. The West End edition of the vehicle, which will be directed by Knott, will be billed as the George Schaefer production. Schaefer staged the Broadway presentation of the play, produced by his firm, Compass Productions.

The New York production, in which James Donald, Kim Hunter, Denholm Elliott, Torin Thatcher and Ethel Griffies costar, is currently in its 15th week at the Belasco Theatre, N.Y. Schaefer is scheduled to arrive March 19 in London in connection with the "Write Me" presentation. There's been no decision yet whether the West End offering will be preceded by a tryout in the provinces.

Recalling Clyde Fitch

Buffalo.

Editor, VARIETY:

In his "Famous Lines From Famous Plays" in your 56th Anniversary Number, Ernest Hughes omits one, Circa 1910, from Clyde Fitch's "The City," Tully Marshall, playing the part of a dope-ridden wastrel, was told that he was born out of wedlock. In a towering rage, he leaned over the table shaking his finger at his accuser and blurted out,

"You're a God-damned liar!"

This was I believe, the strongest language yet used on the American stage. Audiences gasped; the critics everywhere shook their heads and their typewriters direfully; and I almost fell off the top shelf of the gallery in Buffalo's old Teck Theatre in dismay.

The date and the line are significant because since that day, dialogue in the theatre has been going steadily down drain to, say, "The Connection."

Maine Univ. Stude Group To Tour India, Pakistan

The Maine Masque Theatre of the Univ. of Maine, at Orono, will tour India and Pakistan for three-and-a-half-months with productions of two full-length plays and three one-acters. The tour, sponsored by the State Dept. and administered by the American National Theatre & Academy, begins tomorrow (Thurs.).

The repertory of the student group includes "Sunrise at Campabello," "Ah, Wilderness" and the one-acters, "My Heart's in the Highlands," "Saturday Night" and "The Happy Journey." Herschel L. Bricker is director of the Masque.

Albee's One-Act Plays Having Splurge in Chi

Chicago, Jan. 30.

Playwright Edward Albee is having a vogue in Chicago, with three of his one-acters current.

"Zoo Story" opened less than seven weeks ago and is still running at Playwrights at Second City. Last week its companion piece, Jean Genet's "The Maids," was dropped and Albee's "Death of Bessie Smith" substituted on the bill.

The Goodman Theatre is doing Albee's "American Dream" in tandem with Saroyan's "My Heart's In the Highlands."

Opera and Concert Reviews

Un Ballo In Maschera

(Metropolitan, N. Y.)

If the Metropolitan Opera were a Broadway legitimate setup, the billing on this production would be "in association with Mrs. John D. Rockefeller Jr." Her donation permitted the importation of stager Gunther Rennart and sets-costume designer Ita Maximpuwna and possibly the debuting conductor, Nello Santi, from Zurich. The result is a colorful, if sometimes curious, production, notably the use of spotlights not only to keep the singers' faces in almost cinematic closeup, but in the conspiratorial session to throw the three figures, magnified giant, as back curtain silhouettes.

The absurdity of old regime censorship which forced the Verdi opera to pretend it all happened in Boston to an English governor has been corrected and the hero is now the King of Sweden. With the switch, however, the "Salem witch" becomes a Stockholm dockside fortune-teller in an outlandish seaweed skirt. Richly sung by Jean Madeira, however.

In general, the production is opulent, and the gorgeous outpouring of melody sets up "Masked Ball" as an evening of sustained bravura effects in the grand opera style. True, there were further instances of tenor Carlo Bergonzi's tendency to break character and bow to the audience's applause during the action. Leonie Rysanek also succumbed, though less blatantly and so, once, did baritone Robert Merrill.

As for the clacque, it seemed back in force, though non-subscription audiences (this was one) are notably more generous all-round than the regulars. But the opera was conducted with fine discipline and the singers, well led, were all first-rate, with perhaps a question about the pants part of Oscar, sung by Anneliese Rothenberger, a beguiling figure but thin below the top range.

The occasion was rendered piquant by the return to the Met of Luben Vichey, the basso who in recent years has been president of National Concerts & Artists Corp. As the Met boasts it has whatever other opera houses have, and then some, it is possibly a "first" to have a former concert manager as a singer. He seemed in good voice, and a pretty dark villain in the bargain. His co-conspirator, of whom the same may be repeated, was Bonaldo Giaiotti. Land.

Concerts

New York Philharmonic

(With Thomas Schippers)

Thomas Schippers, originally a Menotti protege but now a young batoneer with La Scala, Metropolitan Opera and other notable credits, returned to the New York Philharmonic at Carnegie Hall for a program of Bach, Prokofiev and Tchaikovsky. Zino Francescatti, the French-Italian violinist, was his guest star.

On paper, it appeared to be a curious juxtaposition of composers. Yet the concert was an enjoyable matinee (21). The Bach D major suite, played with a reduced orchestra, enabled the expert Philharmonic wind-performers to be heard with clarity. Soloist Francescatti brought his aristocratic manner to a stylish delivery of Prokofiev's second concerto.

The program's finale—Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique"—evoked a jubilant ovation of shouts and applause for Schipper's interpretation. This familiar work, oft dismissed as trite and hackneyed, was led with a verve and authority that made it seem fresh as the day it was premiered. Maestro Schippers did not dawdle over the lyrical passages, directed an astringent performance that high-lighted the work's beauty and the climaxes, in which the Philharmonic brass rang out defiantly and brilliantly. The Sunday audience interrupted the proceedings at the end of the third movement with an outburst of cheers that delayed the final section for some time. 1962 concert manners being discarded in recognition of a thrilling, furious march.

Wien.

The production of 'The Fantasticks' at the Charles Playhouse, Boston, has extended its engagement through Feb. 11.

Arnold Steinhardt

(Academy of Music, Bklyn.)

In his first New York appearance since his win in the 1958 Leventritt Competition, Arnold Steinhardt, 24-year-old Los Angeles violinist, revealed the qualities of musicianship and integrity, plus an abundant technique, that had endeared him to the judging panel of America's musical world series. Tall, good-looking and with a modest stage personality, Steinhardt may some day ignite the critics and public into making him a world-famed fiddler.

Facing a small audience at the Brooklyn Academy of Music Tuesday (23), Steinhardt bowed his way through Brahms' A major sonata, Leon Kirchner's Sonata Concertante, Bach's unaccompanied G minor sonata and Schubert's Rondo Brilliant, Opus 70 in true virtuosic manner. He made it all sound easy, yet none of his playing was superficial. Wien.

he had almost two full houses and still lost money, asserts, "I can't begin to bring in any other attractions under these circumstances."

In regard to the "Thurber" situation, a spokesman for the local stagehands' union argues that Christena had been advised to ask for an adjustment a week before the presentation was to open here, when it was evident that the house could not use the scenery. The union rep claims Christena took no action at that time. Incidentally, local stagehands this season received their first raise in scale in seven years, from $2.50 to $2.75 an an hour.

Taking another view on the legit situation here is Mel Ross, who with Carol Byrne, his partner in Theatre Productions, booked shows into the Murat the last three seasons. It's Ross' contention that New York producers do not mount their touring productions with an eye to road conditions. The prohibitive cost of road show bookings, he contends, is not a result of local labor demands, but a direct result of arbitrary and ineffectual planning on the part of the New York orginators.

Ross says his company lost money on the Murat bookings, but was able to recoup last spring with the engagement at the house of "Flower Drum Song." He and his partner then decided to quit "while we were ahead," he adds. He also thinks that local theatregoers are not "drama-minded," and prefer the expensive musicals to straight plays.

however, and the performers proved savvy on a large number of other current political topics. Some one asked what a discussion between President Kennedy and Sen. Barry Goldwater, the conservative Republican, on the new budget would be like.

At that, an actor portraying Goldwater told another impersonating Kennedy that the White House had goofed at claiming a $500,000,000 surplus in the budget (the figure had just been announced and showed how carefully the cast is combing newspapers). The Senator said his accountants had discovered faulty arithmetic and that the budget was really $500,000,000 in the red.

"Oh," said the Presidential actor, pulling his wallet from his pocket, "is that all?"

The company did a dozen or more such blackouts tied to the latest headlines, to the delight of the crowd. The routines are the sort of skits the Gridiron Club has been doing here for many years, and the city has a vast appetite for such political spoofing.

Audience response, greatly enthusiastic, must have delighted the Shoreham Hotel management which made the investment.

The expert cast includes Flicker, Joan Darling, Thomas Aldredge and James Frawley.

Henry Miller Book Defense

Wilbur R. Goodhue, proprietor of the Dartmouth College Bookstore in Hanover, N.H., pleaded innocent when he went on trial in Superior Court in nearby Lebanon on a charge of having sold Henry Miller's old Parisian novel, "Tropic of Cancer," in violation of New Hampshire's statutes banning "obscene" literature.

A summons was served on Goodhue, Nov. 8, when he allegedly sold a copy of the book to Hanover Police Chief Andrew J. Ferguson after the latter had warned him to remove the book from the shelves of his store.

Defense Atty. S. John Stebbins, who is also associate judge of Hanover Municipal Court, told the court he would defend his client on the grounds that the New Hampshire law against obscene literature is unconstitutional under the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution, concerning freedom of the press.

New Tool Vs. Girly Mags

Motion Picture Division, New York State Education Department, would be allowed to issue advosory opinions on films deemed "suitable" for youths, and provide for third party (ex parte) applications for injunctions in civil proceedings against "girly and sex" magazines, under bills introduced Wednesday (17) by the Joint Committee to Study the Publication and Dissemination of Offensive and Obscene Material.

Luigi R. Marano, a Brooklyn Republican assemblyman and new chairman of the Joint Committee, explained that the series of measures were intended to provide "some degree" of protection for children and to "rearm enforcement officials with weapons against obscenity."

Cincy Enquirer Stock Split

Directors of the Cincinnati Enquirer Inc., proposed a two-for-one split after declaring a quarterly dividend of 50c a share. Voting will be April 23.

Roger H. Ferger, president and publisher of the a.m. and Sunday paper said the split would be accomplished by increasing the 10-year-old corporation's shares to 1,000,000. Of the present 2,994 shareholders, 82% live in the Greater Cincinnati area.

For the year ended Sept. 30, the second best profit year, net earnings of $975,113 equaled $2.33 a share.

Easier Not To Say

District 5 of the Knights of Columbus in Lincoln, N.H., has adopted a resolution calling on all dealers in the area to rid their newsstands of all "objectionable" books and magazines but said it would not tell the dealers which publications to discard, but would let them use their own knowledge of the contents of various books and magazines to guide them.

The resolution emphasized the availability of obscene literature, which it described as "destructive of the minds, character and morality of our youths, debasing society in general and the individual in particular."

Malaparte Lives On

Late Curzio Malaparte ("The Skin") once considered the bad boy of Italian literature continues to shock and surprise, even dead.

After carefully sorting out the massive sheafs of notes and manuscripts that he left scattered in his various homes, his publishers now have put together his second posthumous book. It contains some of Malaparte's most brilliant writing. In the first book he had already tried his hand at "group-character-analysis." In "Maledetti Toscani" (Damned Tuscans) he alternately flayed and caressed the peculiarities of the people who live between the Appenines and the sea on the paralell that runs through Florence. He knew these people well, for (born in Prato) he was one of them. In the forthcoming book "Benedetti Italiani" (Blessed Italians) he done likewise for the other regions of Italy—and the book is one about which—unlike most posthumous offerings—no one will exclaim "Better have left it in the cupboard as the author obviously intended." Malaparte, also in this book as in all others—is at his worst and at his best in it. And it has always been difficult to point out what really constitutes his best or his worst in his unique mixture of earthiness and fantasy, vulgarity and poetry, maudliness and tragedy. One thing is certain: he belonged to the writers who can never be anonymous, even if published without a by-line. His signature is in every paragraph he ever wrote.

OBITUARIES

FRITZ KREISLER

Fritz Kreisler, 86, celebrated violinist and composer, died Jan. 29 in New York following a heart attack. He had suffered similar attacks in recent years and entered a hospital 16 days before his death. A virtuoso of the concert platform for decades, he retired 12 years ago but continued to compose.

One of the top ranking violinists of the world, Kreisler was a child prodigy. Born in Vienna, the son of a doctor who was musically inclined, he studied at the Vienna Conservatory and won a gold medal there at the age of 10. Two years later he won the Premier Grand Prix de Rome in competition with 40 students, none of whom was under 20.

He made his U. S. debut in 1888 and toured the country the following year. Returning to Europe, he studied medicine and art. He also served as an officer in the Austrian army. For a time he considered a military career but he resumed the violin and displayed such artistry that critics agreed that he, indeed, was a master of the instrument.

Before retiring from the concert stage, Kreisler had made many world tours. He composed such works as "Caprice Viennois," "Liebesfreud," "The Old Refrain" and "Liebesleid." He also wrote two operettas, "Apple Blossoms" and "Sissy." He had been a member of ASCAP since 1924. A delegation from that society will attend the requiem mass tomorrow (Thursday) at private funeral services to be held in the Church of St. John the Evangelist, First Ave. and 55th St.

Surviving are his wife, the former Harriet Lies whom he wed in 1902, and a nephew.

IN LOVING MEMORY
ALFRED APAKA
(Jan. 30, 1960)

TONY TODARO, ASCAP
MARY JOHNSTON, ASCAP

ROBINSON JEFFERS

Robinson Jeffers, 75, poet and verse dramatist, died Jan. 20 in Carmel, Cal. His verse play, "Medea," was performed on Broadway in 1946 and became a major vehicle for actress Judith Anderson, who had requested that he write it.

Among his other, better-known plays are "The Cretan Woman" and "Tower Beyond Tragedy."

A native of Pittsburgh, Jeffers came west to Occidental College, near Los Angeles, and graduated from that school in 1905. He also spent three years at the U. of Southern California's medical school and at the U. of Washington's forestry school, quitting the latter because "they want to cut down trees, not save them."

In 1914 he settled at Carmel with his bride and they built a home overlooking the Pacific. In that home he did all his work, including such narrative poems as "Roan Stallion," "Tamar" and "The Women at Point Sur." Nearly all his work was set along the California coast, with the exception of the Greek tragedies.

His wife, Una, died in 1950. Twin sons survive.

(Jan. 27, '61)
Son—Andy McLaughlin

HUGH FINDLAY

Hugh Findlay, 64, publicist with Associated-Rediffusion, died Jan. 22 in London. Before joining A-R in 1955, he had a long career as a film industry publicist.

He joined the film industry in the publicity department of Pathe Freres, and eventually became publicity manager of Gaumont, New World and 20th Century. He was with the Ministry of Information Films Division, from 1940-41, then became publicity director of Leslie Howard Productions.

In 1943 he joined Ealing Studios. He subsequently became publicity director of MGM-British and MGM-Amalgamated Studios. Later he was studio director of publicity for Renown Picture Corp.

Survived by his wife and daughter.

LEONARD HAYMAN

Leonard Hayman, 61, actor-singer, and a founder of the Assn. of Canadian Radio & Television Artists (ACTRA), died Jan. 17 in Vancouver, B. C. Born in Plymouth, England, he came to Canada in 1910, and as a member of the Barbershop Quartet sang on Canadian Broadcasting Corp. network radio programs out of Vancouver for over 20 years.

He also took part in the Theatre Under The Stars productions of "Guys And Dolls" and "Damn Yankees," and appeared as an actor on the CBC network tv drama series, "Tidewater Tramp."

Hayman was instrumental in founding the Vancouver union of radio and television artists in 1950, since affiliated with the Canadian Council of Authors & Artists (CCAA), in establishing national pay scales and working conditions. He also was its first administrator as executive director. He had been in ill health for the past year but continued his radio work.

A brother survives.

ROBERT H. LINDSAY

Robert H. Lindsay, 51, tv script writer, died Jan. 21 in Greenlawn, L.I. Canadian-born, he was a graduate of the U. of Toronto and produced many radio plays in that city where he was an exec with the J. Walter Thompson Co.

After moving to New York in 1941, Lindsay adapted other writers' plays but had two of his own produced on Kraft TV Theatre in 1953. These were "The Chess Game" and "One Left Over." He write over 200 one-hour originals and adaptations, a number in collaboration with his wife, an American writer and novelist. One of their joint efforts won them a Christopher Award for best script of 1956, being tagged "Miracle at Potter's Field."

Survived by divorced wife.

Plato Skouras

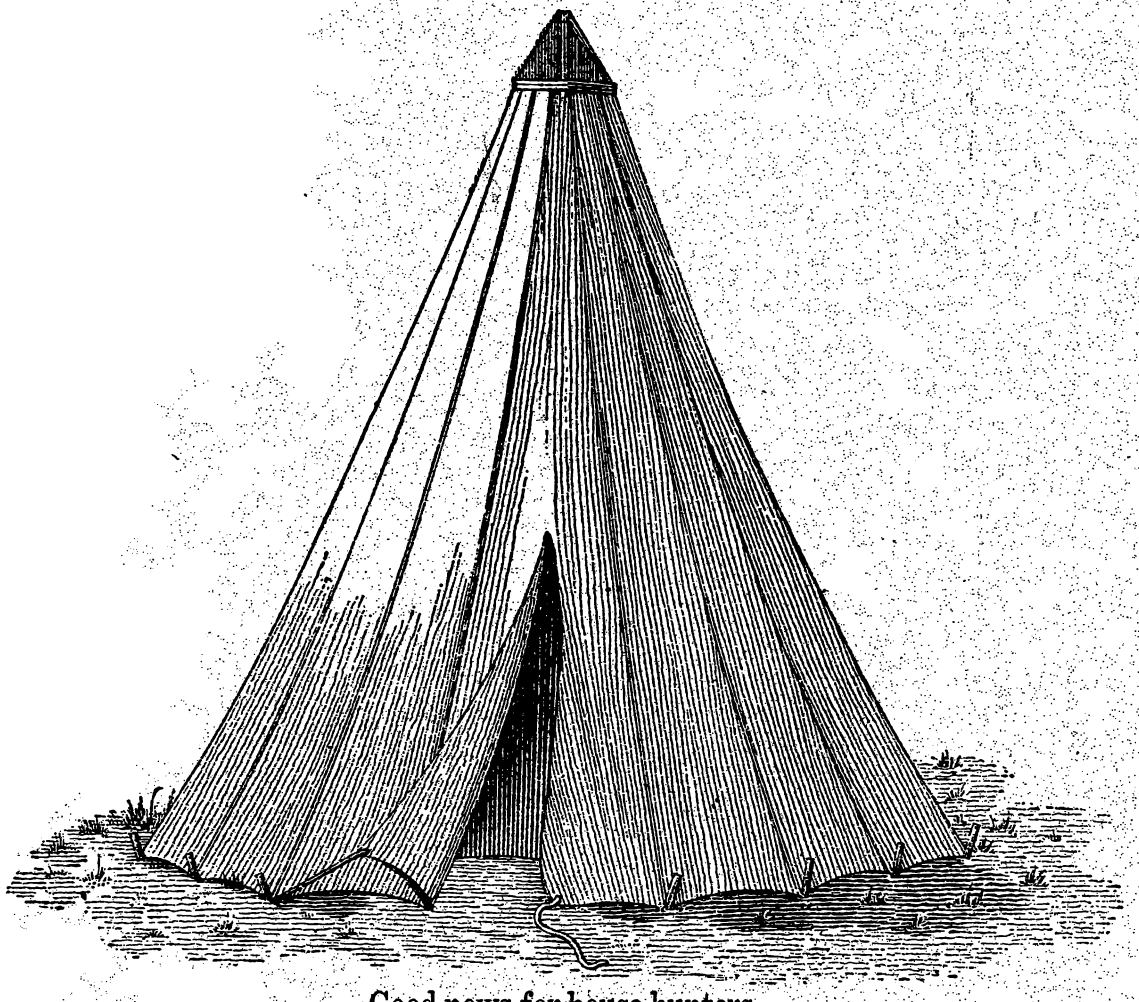
bitterly. In Holland and Ireland the Catholic press seemed to be totally against it, he pointed out.

Relative to newspaper critics and columnists critical of it, Skouras believes "they would have done more good for Christianity if they had written me personally rather than seeking to prevent their readers from seeing the film. It is better to have someone trying to do the right thing than to have no one doing anything, even if the person trying is not perfect."

"The film will do less than 30% of the business that the 'Song of Bernadette' did in this country," Skouras continued. "I consider this to be a very poor showing since the country's population is considerably larger, and in particular the Catholic population has grown a great deal. The poor result is as much due to the lack of support from both the Catholic clergy and the press as it is to the film's own weaknesses."

Commenting on the matter in the column, Diehl stated he was unable to agree with either Mother Jude or Skouras anent the film being meritorious.

"Skouras has a valid point in bemoaning the lack of support given this Catholic-flavored film by the Catholic community at large only if the Catholic moviegoer isn't an independent film fan who expects quality of a picture whether it deals with a saint or sinner," wrote Diehl. "As I judged it, 'Francis of Assisi' is not a quality film. And it is rather unfair for Skouras to blame the flop on the Catholics."



Good news for house hunters.

Did you know that one of man's greatest architectural achievements is the simple, portable tent. Viewers learned this when they tuned in on Granada's DESIGN, a wonderful programme and fascinating lecture series, winning audiences from Yorkshire to Wales. "Basic though it may be," Dr. Reyner Banham (guest lecturer and assistant editor of the Architectural Review) informed them, "a tent gives more shelter per pound weight and pound sterling than any other shelter known to man..." (Hello Irving, come in, close the flap and make yourself at home.)
